

Million Dollar Gift

"St. Andrews has been through a major financial crisis in the last several years," says President Perkinson, "but we are now operating on a balanced budget, and with the stimulus of this gift we hope to improve our financial situation substantially over the extended period. We are also pleased with the opportunity to take our educational program and long-range needs to the Presbyterians of North Carolina."

"Despite the inroads of government, American philanthropy continues to be one of the great forces in providing for higher education," adds President Perkinson. "More than a year ago our management consultants told us that what St. Andrews needed was the dynamism that a seven-figure gift would provide. Now we have reached that goal, and we expect to push onward to providing the strongest possible liberal arts education."

This past summer the college announced the completion of its finest annual campaign for support, reporting receipts of $586,608.

This is the largest amount raised by any church-related college in North Carolina during this past fiscal year for annual support, and represents a 33 per cent gain over 1976 for St. Andrews.

An ambitious goal of $525,000 had been set, and this was exceeded by 12 per cent. The goal for the annual campaign for 1977-78 has also been set at $525,000.

Loftus To Edit Review

The announcement was made by executive editor Ron Baves, English professor at the college, who resumed executive editorship following the resignation of Dr. F. Whitney Jones. Jones has moved to Winston-Salem where he is now director of development at Old Salem, Inc.

Baves also made announcements concerning the upcoming issue of the "St. Andrews Review" which has received a $1,500 grant from the North Carolina Arts Council and a $2,500 grant from the National Endowment for the Arts.

The special translation issue will feature the first appearance in English of Yukio Mishima's last play translated by Hiroaki Sato and the first public appearance of M. C. Richard's translated to Erik Satie's "Ruse of the Medusa" as performed at Black Mountain College under the direction of John Cage and Arthur Penn.

Also featured in this issue will be essays on translations by Guy Davenport, Wallace Fowle and Donald Keene, translations from young poets and fiction writers in Japan, Turkey, Greece and Italy, and a special section of young translators guest edited by Dr. Walter de Rachewitz.

New student associate editors to replace graduated seniors are Lin Thompson, a

At The Movies

The College Union Board Film of the Week:

Featuring Pat O'Brien, Adolphe Menjou, Mary Brian, Edward Everett Horton, Walter Catlett, George Stone, Mae Clark, and Frank McHugh.

Length: 1 hour, 42 minutes.

"The Front Page" is one of those movies that has suffered with remakes over the years, each successively worse than its predecessor. A 1940 version switched roles about and made it a battle of the sexes between Cary Grant and Rosalind Russell; the 1975 Walter Matthau - Jack Lemmon version is even worse.

The version the CUB has secured is the original 1931 film of the play by Charles MacArthur and Ben Hecht. Thought to be lost for years, this print was recently discovered and put back into circulation. It's a sophisticated comedy about a newspaperman in Chicago in the 1920's. The Chicago John Dillinger and Al Capone. Directed by Lewis Milestone, who also did "All Quiet On The Western Front," "The Front Page" is probably the best film on journalism ever done, and a lot of fun, too.

Library Gets Computer Display Unit

Work will be simplified and performed more efficiently this year as librarians at St. Andrews receive assistance from a new computer display terminal.

Purchase of the terminal was provided by an $8,000 grant from the W. K. Kellogg Foundation of Battle Creek, MI, received last summer. Through use of the computer terminal and its connection with the Ohio College Library Center (OCLC), St. Andrews librarians will have direct and immediate access to all bibliographical information needed for purchasing and cataloguing books.

The funds from the Kellogg grant enabled the college to join Southeastern Library Network (SOLINET), one of many regions all over the country connected to OCLC in Ohio.

According to Mrs. Margaret ennett, librarian in charge of cataloguing and serials, the terminal will initially serve the library in three areas: cataloguing, inter-library loan and ordering books.

"Before receiving the terminal the process of cataloguing a book was a long and involved one," the Librarian explains.

"This way we can tie into the data base at OCLC and use information other libraries have already compiled."

Other possible uses of the terminal include a serials program to check in magazines and book circulation.

"The system is an expensive one," Mrs. Bennett continues, "but I think it will be worthwhile. We'll have more time and we'll have books ready quickly and more efficiently."

Mrs. Betty Holmes, head librarian, describes the terminal as "a very useful tool which actually permits us to get new books on the shelf and in our card catalogue weeks earlier than has been possible in the past. We are looking forward to using it because it permits use to be of greater service to students and faculty."

Science Program

participants gather at St. Andrews for a week to discuss ways the lecture material can be applied in school situations.

Special guest lecturers will review the history of the current energy situation, offer projects, and summarize governmental action to date with proposals for the future.

Selection for the program is aimed at science teachers in the central Carolinas who have a need for further experience in the area of energy, Wetmore says.

"St. Andrews has traditionally encouraged its innovative science program by becoming involved with the activities of science teachers in this area," he continued.

New Dean

The newly appointed dean of students did his undergraduate work at Bluefield Junior College and Berea College, and received masters' degrees in divinity and theology at Duke University. He recently completed his thesis for his doctorate in psychology at the University of Oklahoma.

Prior to his move to Oklahoma, Claytor was associate dean of students and dean of men at Berea College in Kentucky, 1970-72. A Methodist minister, he has also had experience as director of chaplain's services at Spartanburg General Hospital in Spartanburg, SC, and consultant at Veterans Administration Hospital in Durham. During 1961-69 he received a joint appointment with Duke University as assistant chaplain and at the Divinity School as instructor in pastoral psychology.

that sort of thing is going on in Revco's North Carolina stores and getting it stopped if we find tht it is."

Thompson said that he had asked PIRG's legal staff in Durham to look into the matter and determine how best to proceed with the inquiry.

Founded in 1972, the North Carolina Public Interest Research Group is made up of over 10,000 students on the campuses of St. Andrews, Elon College, Wake Forest University, Duke University, and Davidson College who decide in referenda on a given sum to be paid each term in support of the campus chapter's operations and a staff of professional legal advisors and researchers located at the organization's state office in Durham.
