Volleyball For Brooks Fund

By Reeta Roy

The College Christian Union sponsored a volleyball game to raise money for Joshua Brooks, who needs a liver transplant within three months. That night's match, won by the faculty (15-4), raised over $80 for the Brooks Fund. According to Fred Henley, "It was great to see everyone there. The players and crowd had an exciting time." One of the referees, Eva Pittman commented, "The game showed that people did care for Joshua. There was a big turnout, and I enjoyed it tremendously."

Causes like Joshua's have allowed the campus to express their care and sensitivity. Kamala Jones observed, "It felt good to do something for Joshua. Some people donated money even though they couldn't make it, and some paid $2 even though the price had been lowered to $1." Penny Cunningham hoped that "it'll make a difference."

The C.C.U. extends a special thanks to the following people for their generous support: Eva Pittman, Kelly Aker, and Elaine Kelly for refereeing; Murray Hall and Hunter Wingate for "flagging"; Wilson Goodson for his publicity shots; Mr. Marshall Hearn and Mr. John Maulsby for setting up the gym; and the students and faculty who were at the game.

Another challenging program the C.C.U. has undertaken is the Mental Health Outreach Program, which is headed by the Community Outreach Committee (formerly the Pastoral Committee). The director of the Mental Health Program is an enthusiastic Psychology major, Cynthia Stevenson. The committee members volunteer their time at two group homes in the Laurinburg area. "A group home is an establishment above an institution, which provide it's residents with opportunities to relate with "normal" people," according to Lawrence Smith. Lawrence has had three years of experience working with mentally retarded people.

Cynthia stated that the home is "a next step into society." The committee is sharing with the residents pursuing specific ways to spend their leisure time. "We are trying to key in on their individual needs and interests. I hope we can make more use of St. Andrews' facilities like the gym and Fargo," said Cynthia. "Many of the committee members have gained a better understanding about various individual needs, not necessarily restricted to the group homes, but other human beings."

Charges Filed

On Oct. 17, Pat Howlett was given the choice to withdraw from school or face expulsion, according to Dean of Students, William Loftus.

"The action was taken due to a cumulation of social problems in the dormitory (Albemarle) and in Laurinburg," Loftus said.

Howlett was charged with assault on a female in civil court in Laurinburg. He pleaded no contest and received a sentence of prayer for judgement continued. "We will not tolerate repeated incidences of socially disruptive behavior," said Loftus. The same type of action would have been taken with other students according to Loftus. Loftus went on to say that this type of behavior is "a slap in the face for other students." The social and academic lives of the students are disrupted and appropriate action will be taken.

The Writer's Forum will feature James Laughlin, President of New Directions on Thursday, November 3, 1983 at 8:00 p.m. Laughlin will speak on William Carlos Williams (on the eve of his centennial celebration) and read from his private collection.

Brantley On Probation

On September 26, Chris Brantley appeared before the Honor Court on charges that he lied to the Dean of Students. Lying is a violation of the St. Andrews Honor Code.

Brantley was charged with lying about the time of his arrival to his room on a night in which another incident occurred on campus. Brantley was not facing any other charges and his involvement in any other incidents was never questioned or assumed.

The Honor Court found Brantley guilty of lying to the Dean and he was placed on probation for six weeks. During his probation, Brantley is to follow his normal academic and social activities at St. Andrews. However, during the period he is to be in his suite by 11:00 p.m. seven nights a week. Furthermore, Brantley is to appear at an interview with the Honor Court and one with an official from the Student Life Office. During his probation, Brantley is restricted from assuming any elected office.

At press time, no formal appeal to the charges had been filed.

Student Life News

New Boiler - St. Andrews has purchased a new boiler for the physical plant to be installed by November 10. The Student Life Office is confident that it will eliminate the recurrent problems with hot water and heating.

Dorm Meetings - Spotlights will be set up to light the end of the causewalk nearest Wilmington Dorm. The lights will be positioned under the Wilmington overhang nearest the causewalk.

A light will also be placed between Concord and the Freedom Village trailers.

Security - Four new members, all students, have been placed on the St. Andrews security force. A full-time member has also been hired. The residential side of the campus will now be patrolled more effectively. A couple of arrests have already been made.
