writer-in-residence at Louisiana State University and director of the P.E.N. project on censorship; Robin West, professor of law at the University of Maryland and Grace Gibson, resident humanities scholar at St. Andrews College. Other experts in the field will also be invited to speak.

Each scholar will appear for a public lecture in the evening at the Scotland County Public Library on regularly scheduled evenings from February through May. The scholars will also field questions on the St. Andrews campus the day of the lecture and be available for discussion at midday in an informal setting at Weymouth in Southern Pines. All appearances will be open to the public.

"We are delighted that the N.C. Humanities Council and the National Endowment for the Humanities have chosen to fund this project," Rigsbee said. "The issues that we are interested in discussing will be of great value to our students who are planning to pursue careers in the media, but more importantly, these are issues that affect the daily lives of us all. I think this grant will enable St. Andrews to perform an important public service.

"Each of us needs to think carefully about these issues and about how we receive our information as well as the information that is received," Rigsbee said.

Task Force committee composed of David Perkinson and myself, and furthermore; numerous quality-of-life issues are being placed on the table.

A couple of notes of encouraging news: A Senate committee is working diligently on making the student Gathering Place a reality. With a scheduled move of the Bookstore within this month, construction of the Gathering Place will hopefully begin by December, (let's keep our fingers crossed).

The Bell Tower has been a topic of growing concern. I have been told that the Bell Tower is in need of clock repairs and bell replacement. It will ring again. The repairman is working on the clock, and you can see that the light does shine again, occasionally.

In closing, the SA is doing its best to make substantive improvements and we ask for your patience and support. If anyone has any questions, suggestions, or complaints, please see any officer of the SA. If he/she does not have an answer, we will do our best to find you one. It may not be the answer you want to hear, but it will be an answer.

According to sources within and outside the Student Association, the administration of this college is under strict instructions to clean up the reputation of this school, a reputation gained largely by virtue of the drug-related death of a student last year, and to avoid any future liability.

Rules must be made and enforced.

According to Wilson, if you are caught with a bong, you're going to get charged. If you're caught with a knife, you're going to get charged. What happened to littering, loitering and singing off key?

Unless you subscribe to the theory that the only way to stay out of trouble is to stay out of trouble, there is only one option open to you if you are charged by the attorney general. Plead not guilty and demand a public hearing before the Student-Faculty Hearing Court. Demand that the student defense counsel, the attorney general and the court do the jobs they were elected to do. Let's see if there is really any justice to be had at St. Andrews.

be a positive aspect.

Replacing AV in LA will be all of the offices for Student Services. College Work-Study, Financial Aid, and Career Development will be there. Dr. Ronnie Newman will move across the lake from the Student Life Office. Also included will be an interview room where classes on interviewing techniques will be held.

Student Services will also house a Resource Library. A contribution by Mrs. Jack Ferren, which was matched by IBM, will be used to improve this library.

The offices should be completed within the next few weeks.

The remaining question is what will happen to AV. Paul Chapel, in his second year of work-study in the AV center, chuckled when he said that the low ceiling in the present location causes some of the tall professors not to be able to stand there.

participated in this year and has been hired to coach the Johns Hopkins University team upon his graduation. He is considered the number one debator on the parliamentary debate circuit.

Parliamentary debate differs from the traditional on-topic debate, according to Atchison. "It's all common knowledge," Atchison said. "The teams form a debatable topic and the team which displays the best argument and communicates it effectively wins.

"Topics can range from the War Powers Act being invoked by congress to why violent cartoons should be taken off of television," Atchison said.

"Interest has grown steadily and it's never too late to get involved," Atchison said of the team, which plans trips to Yale, Princeton and New York University in the spring. "No prior experience is necessary.

"How could you not like beating teams the caliber of Princeton, Yale and Harvard in anything academic?" Atchison said. "It feels like beating the UNC Basketball team."

A new coin-operated copy machine for the library is on the way. Also relief for the chair-less people in Orange is coming; chairs have been ordered and will arrive soon. Also, the Senate is looking into the possibility of placing more change machines on campus. Possible locations are the Commuter Student Lounge and the new Gathering Place.

The Senate and Cabinet would like to thank the whole Student Body for making the Presidential Celebration a success.

awards represent "contributions made to the arts in North Carolina in the same spirit that Sam has made those contributions," according to chairman of the Ragan Award committee and St. Andrews Writer-In-Residence Ron Bayes.

Previous award winners include former Secretary of Cultural Resources, Sara Hodgkins of Southern Pines; executive director of Reynolda House in Winson-Salem, Nicholas Bragg; editor of the Fayetteville Times, Roy Parker; and founder of the International Festival of Dance in Durham, Ella Fountain Pratt.

arise out of the games.

"The main purpose of the intramural program is to get students involved in school activities," explained Jim Reese. "A few years ago the Student Life Office took a survey and found out the sports that were most popular among the student body and from those surveys they decided what sports would be incorporated into the intramural program.

"The program is really good for getting students involved in school-related activities and athletics. Hopefully, it also promotes good sportsmanship within the school, though we have been having some problems with that this year."

The problems of which Jim speaks are mainly referee problems. The refs for the games are upper-classmen who have played intramural football before and understand the rules of the game. The problem is that it is very difficult to find upper-classmen who are willing to ref because most of them also have games that day and are trying to conserve their strength and good temper, because being a referee is tiring, both physically and emotionally.

"No one really wants to be the one getting yelled at," shrugged Jim. "We pay each student ref three dollars a game, but it's still hard to find guys to do it. Also, we need more than two refs a game, because two guys just can't see everything that goes on. The only problem is that we can't afford more than two guys a game."

Despite the problems, the players usually manage to have fun on the field. The teams are trying to accumulate records good enough to get them into the playoffs, the date for which has not yet been set. The team which comes out on top in the playoffs will get tee-shirts for each of the members which say "1987 Intramural Football Champs".

"Intramurals are a great way for a small school to get football teams together," one player said. "And, even though there are some problems with the program, I think just about everyone has a good time out there. Why else would they keep on playing?"
