

Stiff New Penalties Proposed for Honor Code Violations

Potholes Filled With High Tech Parking Spaces

A new proposal which would strengthen the penalty for honor code violations has been proposed by the Student Association.

The controversial punishment for lying involves the surgical elongating of the offender's probosus.

Many students are outraged at the new proposal. "It's unconstitutional," one student complained. "It has to be. You can't just go around messing with people's faces. We just don't want the school nosing around our business any more than they do already."

While many students took this proposal as a joke it looks as though it will pass the Student Association and be signed into law by newly elected Student Association President, Pinnochio Jones.

"It's a good law," Jones said. "Besides, I don't see what all the fuss is about. It's not like they are doing something that might make someone look bad."

This form of deterrence has been labeled by some administrators as "a bit harsh," but, so far, no campus groups have come forward to openly protest the proposal. The biggest complaint, according to one administrator, has come from the Maintenance department. "They said we might have to widen some doorways and raise some ceilings," The administrator said.

This is an example of what dishonest students have to look forward to if "Honesty Bill" passes SGA

The J.M. Offman Corporation is developing 25 acres of prime waterfront salt marsh property in the Boca Raton area. The office complex to be built on the site will be the new corporate headquarters of Bakker & Swaggert Nighttime Film Enterprises. Invest now, and we guarantee up to a 442% return on your initial investment within 10 years. The best part about it is that its all tax exempt. Don't wait! Invest now and secure your piece of the action.

J.M. OFFMAN CORPORATION
6659 BISCAYNE BLVD
CORAL GABLES, FLA

Tax Exempt

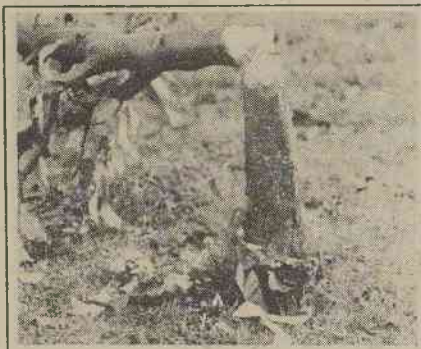

State-of-the-art, high tech parking spaces recently installed (below) (Above) Maintenance worker demonstrates correct parking procedure

Students reacted with a mixture of shock and surprise last week when two of the schools major problems were remedied at the same time.

Potholes have been a source of student gripes in the past few months in addition to inadequate campus parking.

State-of-the-art high tech parking places have been installed over the existing potholes, solving everyone's problems.

"It's about time they did something about the potholes," said one student. "I know people who probably never will find their cars again, after running into those things."

"I'm glad they did something about the parking," said another student. "If they are having a wrestling match or a concert here, it's just impossible to find a parking place."

The new parking places were purchased from Trees R' Us in Arborville Wis. at a cost of $30 Thousand each.

"I think we got a bargain," said one official. "Not only are they functional, they look good too."

Jack Ripper, campus gardener, was not as enthusiastic. "I think they are a damn inconvenience," Ripper said. "First thing you know, you'll have birds nesting on them and doing you-know-what all over the cars. Then people will really have something to complain about."

FOR SALE:
ONE USED TOOTH BRUSH,
RED WITH RAISED BRISTLES
AND REACH AROUND CAPABILITY
EXCELLENT CONDITION- LOTS OF GOOD USE LEFT IN THIS
BABY. $2.50 OBO
CALL EXT 460 AND ASK FOR NEAL.