REPORT: SAGA KILLS

By Michael Roberts
Editor-in-Chief

A recent study by the public Health Department of the state of North Carolina indicates that many students at St. Andrews Presbyterian College have actually died from eating food prepared at SAGA.

A follow-up investigation into these reports has revealed that many students who reportedly transferred from this institution have in fact died from various SAGA related poisonings and diseases.

Criminal charges are pending, but a source at the District Attorney's Office has led Lanced editors to believe that charges will be brought against manager Don Stewart, Jeannie Cox, and President Tom Reuschling. Reuschling reportedly received "hush money" from Marriott Corp. Stewart will be indicted for allowing seventy violations of the state health code to go unrectified. Cox will be indicted as a co-conspirator.

When approached by Lanced reporters, Reuschling read a prepared statement: "Speak to my attorney you yellow slime mongers."

When approached about the violations, Stewart burst into tears and sobbed, "I'm glad it's finally over. I have stayed awake so many nights knowing that we have fed you kids garbage. I'm sorry." Stewart is expected to turn witness for the state in exchange for a lighter sentence, which was serving time in a prison where SAGA caters the meals.

A partial list of infractions indicates that among the violations were: frequent use of food substitutes; reheating food more than 30 days old; using toxic waste as a preserver.

An informal poll conducted by the Lanced indicates that

Some students suggested that since it is a male dominated society, and since men run Marriott Corp. the food would naturally be below par. They quickly added that a woman's place is not

DEATH-another student is stricken with SAGA

most students were not very surprised at the turn of events and were angered that the investigation took so long. One student, Scott "Skippy" Price denounced the charges, and gave his full support for the Marriott Corp. He stated that he has loved the food for three years and often hoards it in his room. He added that he especially likes the spaghetti.

in the kitchen, though.

Most students indicated that they would file criminal suits against SAGA for reckless endangerment.

A memorial service for the fallen students will be held Sunday at 6:00 pm. It might be a good time to call that friend of yours who supposedly transferred some years ago; the one you haven't heard from in a while...
