Dr. G. Tyler Miller is Honored

On April 8, St. Andrews honored one of its former faculty members, Dr. G. Tyler Miller, with a reception and convocation.

In 1976, Miller left active teaching to write full time. He has managed to publish eight textbooks in 21 editions, being used in approximately three-fourths of the universities and colleges in the United States. Living in the Environment, his most popular text, is in its seventh edition. Living in the Environment was the only textbook to make The Ecologist's top 20 list of books written about the environment.

Miller has a strong environmental commitment. He lives and works in an environmentally safe office, and for every tree used to make his books he plants another tree in a tropical rain forest. For each tree that he uses in a manuscript, Dr. Miller plants fifty trees.

Dr. Miller taught at St. Andrews for 10 years, during this time he provided leadership in developing outstanding interdisciplinary and team taught programs. During his tenure as associate dean of instruction, Miller restructured the science curriculum, bringing together a team of well-trained and dedicated scientist to teach St. Andrews' students.

His radical ideas opened the way for the design of the internationally acclaimed John Blue Science Laboratory. He also helped raise funds in major foundation grants to design, build and equip the John Blue Science Laboratory.

While teaching, Miller refined his ideas and research in environmental studies. He was a pioneer thinker in environmental issues, and he understood the urgency of the threats to the environment long before they became a major issue.

He completed a bachelor of science degree in chemistry at Virginia Military Institute and holds a doctorate in physical chemistry from the University of Virginia.

AMERICA

The Democratic party finally has what it wants, total control of the government. But that will be its undoing, for there is no longer a republican president to lay the blame for all of our problems. Anything that is screwed up now will undeniably be the fault of the democrats.

Symbolism now reigns over America. Substance no longer has a place here. Words are more important than deeds. But the poor, homeless, and truly needy need education and action. The Democratic party fails to see that caring about others' feelings will just not cut it. And in the results of the last election, four of every ten Americans believe our problems will be solved by false rhetoric and improper actions. If that is the case, I would rather stand in the bread lines of Russia where everyone knows that they are getting screwed than to see the United States of America, the greatest nation on earth, become a hollowed out shell of its past. Thanks, but no thanks!

Staff editor

Ronald (Ron) H. Bayes has published, Guises: a Chainsong for the Muse, his 12th volume of poetry by Northern Lights Press.

A native of Oregon, Guises is Bayes' second collection of selected shorter poems (1970-1990). His other work, The Casketmaker contained earlier shorter poems (1960-1970). Bayes has also written longer poems that are in four volumes called The Umapine Tetralogy, the last of which came out in 1979. His manuscripts also include a volume of short stories, a book of criticism on John Reed, two works for the stage, and five folios with artist.

Bayes' writing career began while attending a fifth grade at a small public school in Oregon. Through high school he continued his writing and began to write more serious manuscripts. He was graduated from Oregon State College where he completed his bachelor's and master's degrees. At the University of Pennsylvania, Bayes completed graduate studies in American Literature. Bayes' other academic accomplishments include studying at the University of British Columbia, Colorado State University and Trinity College in Dublin, Ireland. Prior to teaching at St. Andrews, he taught at Eastern Oregon State College and the University of Maryland.

During his distinguished career Bayes has received many awards for his writing and teaching of writing. He is a life member of the N.C. Poetry Society and the Oregon Poetry Society. In 1989 he received the N.C. Award for Literature, and was a Pulitzer Prize nominee in 1986.

Guises is available for $12.95 through Northern Lights Press at 493 College Avenue, Orono, Maine 04473.
