A bad sign. (Or a couple dozen)

LA is drowning in paper! Every hallway, every door and every bulletin board is covered in signs announcing various student clubs and activities. It's getting to the point where it's impossible to tell if there are any new jobs on the job board without looking closely. Because there are so many signs, none of them stand out, anyway.. Some suggestions:

Bulletin Boards. There are bulletin boards in the dorms, in the suites and in Belk that are just for student use. Use them, and don't clutter up the bulletin boards that are just for work/study, financial aid or the registrar's office.

The Internet. Mass e-mailing could get annoying, but it's not that bad now and it's a pretty good way to reach everyone. There are also some bulletin boards available on the net.

The cafeteria. The bang-on-a-glass method is embarrassing, but it's an excellent way to get people's attention.

Radio club needs your support to fix up station

Once upon a time there was a radio station on campus here at St. Andrews. This is not another fable, this is a true story. Then somewhere around the late 80's the big bad wolf came and blew it down and the little pigs danced on it's grave.

Since that time, there have been many attempts to get back on the air. Some of these attempts almost made it, and some failed miserably. This newspaper, back in 1991, wrote an article stating that the radio station (WSAP) would be back on the air soon. Now, five years later, we hope to make this happen.

"How do you start a radio station?" you might ask. Well, with the impassioned vision of a Sophomore named John Slifka, a dedicated Senior named Jesse Walker and an energetic Junior named Aaron "Spanky" Selzer, it just might happen. The triumvirate has spent most of it's free time reorganizing the club and digging up old equipment from various basements and closets. Now, soon after the printing of this article, Thursday to be exact, we will be an approved club again. Yet being a club does not a station make. Radio stations are an expensive hobby for college students. This will just give us the power to start raising money and collecting equipment and finding a studio, all of which we need to do before we can get on the air.

Within a week after the approval, the first radio club meeting will take place. That's really what his article is about, ladies and gentlemen. It is an impassioned plea for support from students, faculty and staff to help us make this dream a reality by the end of next semester. So students, come to our meetings, show your support and help us make this happen from the inside. Everyone wants to be a DJ. Faculty and staff, show us your support. I don't have to mention what a boost a real live working radio station would be to the campus and community. We might even let you, the faculty, have your own radio show. That would be interesting. Neal? Prust? Melton?

So let me sum up by saying that if the big bad wolf and the three little pigs show up this year at the radio station, we are going to have ourselves a pig pickin' on a new fur rug. We mean to have this radio station, but we need you help. If you wish to contact us before our meeting, please contact either: John Slifka, Station manager; Jesse Walker, Program Manager; Aaron "Spanky" Seltzer, Business Manager.

Eco-Action is a chance to clean up SACP

Eco-Action, the SACP environmental group, is ready to continue the battle of bringing awareness and action to the SACP community. This year, the group will be dedicating its attention to strengthening the recycling program, encouraging energy conservation and cleaning up our campus (including cigarette butts—they are not seed, they will not grow!)

This year's council consists of: Vida Mia Ruiz, President; Gary Marshall, Vice-President; Christy Pietsch, Treasurer; and Aundrea Lagoda, Secretary.

Eco-Action is a group created by the students and for the students. Any and all input is valuable. Everyone is invited to attend meetings Monday nights at 10:00 in the Orange main lounge.

Please-Every Tuesday Night- RECYCLE-RECYCLE-RECYCLE.
