Three Changes Made In Freshman English

The Department of English has made three changes in the curriculum in order to improve the instruction at the College. First, it has added another person to the staff making ten persons in all; one person is part-time. Second, it has changed the name of the freshman course, shifting from the Communication Skills to English Communication in order to show the new emphasis away from the communication skills per se to reading and writing. The course outline shows the new content.

The first semester will be devoted to exposition. The students will purchase Essays of Our Times by Hamage and Volpe (New York: McGraw-Hill, 1960) as the basis of the reading and discussion. The essays, which deal with contemporary problems, will serve as models of good prose writing. Each student is required to write a minimum of nine essays. The second semester the students will read short stories, a novel, and some poetry. They will be taught to write essays in which they give their opinions of their reading.

Third, the Department of English is offering a developmental program for those students who made scores below the cut-off percentile and on the Entrance Examination. The course, English 50, non-credit, meets five days a week, three days with the teacher of English and two days a week in the Reading Clinic with the teachers of reading. This semester there are five sections of English 50 in which a combination of drill in grammar and language usage, composition, and reading is emphasized to improve the student's skills and form new habits. Already the students have been retested, and thirty have bought up their scores. They will be placed in the corresponding section of English 101.

One new feature of English 50 is the work in Contemporary Composition by Edwin L. Peterson (Chicago: Science Research Associates, 1963). It consists of 30 lessons on 450 basic acetate transparencies with 50 overheads designed to be used with an overhead projector. The Student's Manual follows this visual method of instruction.

The hope is that the new program will step up the performance of all students in English and contribute to the goal of college-standard English for each speaker and writer.

PEP RALLIES

What's happening to the "pep" that State had re-established? Where are the "noise-makers"? Maybe everyone feels that the team doesn't need his support. Well, that's where you're wrong.

Library Committee Lists Plans for Year

The Library Committee met on Monday afternoon, October 7, at four o'clock, in the Browning Room of the G. R. Little Library. It decided upon three projects for the year.

The first is to work up a proposal plan for the new library, the functions of the library, construction, and facilities of the building. The faculty and students are requested to turn in suggestions to Mr. Thompson to be incorporated in the report which will be submitted by Dr. Ridley to an architect.

The second project is to present book reviews in the Browning Room of the library each first and third Sunday at three o'clock. The reviews are given by both interested faculty members and students. A period of discussion will follow.

The first review of the current year was presented on Sunday, November 3, by Dr. T. H. Abraham Wei. He discussed Ta. Tan Tan (Talk Talk, Fight, Fight), a book inside Red China, by Valentin Chu.

The third project is to celebrate National Library Week in April. Again the Committee seeks to present an outstanding author who will discuss his book with the students.
