

"To Mourn A Fallen Angel"

By Avon Chapman

Editor's note

This story will continue on a serial basis. A flash-back of the previous episode will also be included.

The Story Thus Far: The incredible "Angel," Daniel Stone, who is believed to be the individual who did unveil the deep, dark and coveted mystery of those entities who tossed the losing dice for our mankind, is about to undertake his last infraction of the law code before divine providence allows him to fall into the hands of the unknown people. He is now going to walk into a trap made by a woman!

The door of the bank slowly opened. As the policemen looked on, nothing could be seen but a very faint image of a man. The door closed behind it. Someone bellowed, "Grab him before he gets away!" In a fraction of a second after the command was given, a man, disguised as a woman, lunged before the Angel and hit him in the area of his midriff region.

All Action Froze

Unknowingly, the brave young man had hit the button that made Stone invisible. All action froze for a second as the now visible Angel stood crouched before them. He was revealed as a tall, robust young man in his late thirties. His long ruddy face possessed a smoothness that blended perfectly with his ruffled deep-dyed hair.

The Angel Retaliated

Despite his distorted face twisted with pain and chagrin, Daniel Stone was acute enough to think far ahead of his adversaries. Instantly, the Angel retaliated by briskly pushing away his assailant, pressing the button which made him invisible again, removing his revolver and firing toward the center of the ceiling.

No Ordinary Weapon

When the noseless trigger was released, the entire roof began to chatter. Thus, it was evident to the still flabbergasted authorities that this pistol was no ordinary weapon; moreover, they dispersed in dubious anticipation of what the impeccable Angel might do next. Seizing this opportunity, Stone, hopelessly intent upon obtaining that which he had come for, made his way toward the bank vault in the midst of the confusion.

Having found the safe, Stone pulled the trigger twice in its direction and the gigantic door flung open. Feverishly, Daniel removed a strong-fibered plastic bag from his pants pockets, commenced to stash all the paper money in this shopping bag, and, in minutes, absconded through the rear door without any interference.

There Stood Stone

Outside the falling edifice, Police were anxiously awaiting the Angel's retreat. Luckily for Stone, however, his obscure form was camouflaged by a cloud of dirt and grime that emanated from the building. There stood Stone with his pistol dangling in one hand and a bulging bag of crisp new dollar bills in the other. Using straps which were attached to the bag, he placed the bundle across his back and stepped out of the rubble.

Stone's Spectacular Exodus

A barrage of gunfire was now thrown in the direction of the Angel's vague image. The fugitive immediately pushed a knob on his belt and made his spectacular exodus toward the supernal elevation from which he had descended some thirty minutes prior to this present venture.

An Unforgettable Chase

After putting approximately twenty miles between himself and La Crosse in five minutes time, Daniel encountered an obstacle which he had never experienced before in his intrepid escapades. It was just across the state line when he was intercepted by two municipal helicopters ordered to demand his surrender or to destroy him. This was to be the beginning of an unforgettable chase that would last clear across the continent to the east coast.

A New Constitution

By Claudette Moore

Our student chapter (No. 374) of the Music Educators National Conference (MENC) unanimously approved a constitution presented by Willie Graham, chairman of the Constitution Committee. The constitution was presented at the third meeting of the organization which was held October 10, at 7:15 p.m.

The program committee gave its report on suggested activities for the school year. Those included were a student recital, the touring of some radio and television studios, and sponsoring a listening hour.

Miss Evelyn A. Johnson, advisor, read information to the group on the Collegiate Forum. The Collegiate Forum gives the student chapters a chance to write articles for publication in the National Journal of MENC.

In the near future, the group hopes to see one of its articles in the Educators Journal.

Incomparable Christ

By R. Irving Boone
College Minister

The fact that, across the centuries, many great religious leaders and teachers have walked this earth, and, in their presence, have been a mighty influence for good, is immediately conceded. To all of these good and great souls civilization owes a debt of lasting gratitude. This, we also, immediately concede.

In deference, however, to the holy season of Advent—which we now face—and to Him who gives meaning and reality to this Season, the point of this article is to concentrate on the Man of Galilee.

We propose to focus attention on history's greatest—the incomparable Christ Jesus. By any and all standards, Jesus Christ is recognized as the greatest figure in human history. Regardless of whether or not men acknowledge Him as Saviour and Lord, they must pay tribute to Him as the world's most outstanding personality. He is not only the central fact in history, He is, as a matter of fact, the source of history. It is He around whom history revolves, and from whom the reckoning of time stems. The familiar symbols, "B.C." and "A.D." tell the story of His uniqueness in history.

More lives of Jesus have been written during the past fifty years than of any other character in history; more pages are printed about Him every week than about any other 100 of the world's greatest men. He exerts a power on human society that it simply incomprehensible. This Man, Jesus, vanished from the earthly scene over nineteen hundred years ago, yet He still holds the characters of men in a vise. Across the centuries, He holds His own; He goes on from victory to victory and from glory to glory in the minds of men.

He was born contrary to the laws of nature; lived in poverty; was reared in obscurity; only once did He cross the boundary line of the land of His childhood.

In infancy, He startled a king; in boyhood, He puzzled the doctors; in manhood, He ruled the course of nature. He walked upon the billows and hushed the sea to sleep. He healed the multitudes without medicine, and made no charges for His services. He never wrote a book, yet all the libraries of the world could not hold the books that have been written about Him. He never composed a song, yet He has furnished the theme for more songs than all the other song writers combined. He never founded a college, yet all the schools in the world together cannot boast of as many students as He has. He never practiced medicine, yet He has healed more broken hearts and wounded spirits than all the doctors together.

Delta and Omega Present Rush Party

Delta Chi Chapter of Delta Sigma Theta Sorority and Lambda Gamma Chapter of Omega Phi Phi Fraternity presented their annual Rush Party for Freshmen and other interested students, October 15, in the Recreation Room, Moore Hall.

The highlight of the evening was a short program presented by the Pyramid Club and the Lampodos. The program included histories, poems, jokes, different types of songs and dances. The Pyramids were proud to display their fourteen recently inducted sisters, thus making a total number of thirty.

Before the music began to play, providing further entertainment for the guests, the Presidents of Delta Sigma Theta and Omega Phi Phi introduced the members of the Sorority and Fraternity, respectively.

"Man Who Came to Dinner" Is Postponed

The College Players' first production of the season, The Man Who Came to Dinner, has been postponed until after the Christmas holidays, according to the director, Bernard L. Peterson, Jr. The first performance will be held at 8:00 P.M., Friday, February 19, at 2:00 P.M.

Mr. Peterson stated that the number of activities coming in the month of November—homecoming day, mid-semester examinations, and the Thanksgiving holiday—have prevented the Players from scheduling and holding adequate rehearsals for the production.

Also, according to Peterson, the Players are involved in preparations for the Northeastern District Drama Clinic, scheduled to meet at ECSC on December 3rd, and as the College Players are serving as hosts, it was considered desirable to suspend rehearsals until after this meeting.

"The Man Who Came to Dinner is a difficult play to bring across," said Peterson, who has successfully presented the play twice before at two other colleges. "First of all, the leading role is longer than Hamlet, and twice as exhausting. The 'man' remains on stage in a wheelchair throughout the three acts of the comedy, and virtually dominates the scene for almost two full hours."

"We are fortunate to have a talented young actor, William E. Purkett, a junior, English major from Elizabeth City, to play the leading role of Sheridan Whiteside. Purkett has appeared in several productions of the College Players, and should be able to develop the difficult characterization in time."

"We also need time to find the
