"Because I know for a fact that most of the Soul Folk uptown don't know a thing about New York except the ghettos Harlem, the Bronx, and Brooklyn that's as far as they get. They're like encaged people peering out from behind little iron bars...."

"Well maybe that's not how it really is," she said.

"The hell it isn't, baby if our Blacks would realize what they are doing to themselves and get together, they wouldn't just sit in their apartments and gaze. But, no, they'll stay right in their snug rat nests, and eat out of that greasy spoon and rot. And do you know the ironic thing about it all, these are the same folk who go back South and pretend they're living so good. They'll rent that Cadillac or Lincoln and buy one of these $39.95 shiny suits and can't see how Folks in the South live as they do. I tell you it's a sack of hypothetical B.S."

"Since you're so staunchly against the way we live in the North, nobody made you come here, or come to New York for that matter."

"Hold it Jo, I'm not against the people, it's the system. Why can't we be ourselves, why can't we be us and stop trying to imitate Charley all the time. We have been suppressed for so long until many of us don't take time to realize what we're really doing to each other, and what the Honky is doing to us."

"I thought I came to view some art, not to discuss the social problems of the day," she said blankly.

"I'm sorry I didn't mean to go off on a tangent."

"In just the short time that I've known you, I've already detected that you are a sensitive and very bitter man," she said.

"Baby I was born sensitive but it's the nasty and the ugly things in life that have made me bitter."

Late Afternoon

"How was your day?"

Henry asked.

"Just beautiful, thanks to your playing cupid."

"I thought you'd like her, that's why I sent her over."

"Then you planned it all?" Roy said.

"Of course man, tell me what happened?"

"Oh, I sold a painting, which I think will be able to take me over some of the rough spots. And I think I'll be able to move into an apartment."

"Well, don't you like her? Of course she's a little silly but you'll get used to her. Did you kiss her?"

"No, I didn't kiss her."

"Don't worry about that, as I said she is silly. You don't have to leave do you? Why don't you stay here?"

"I couldn't do that," Roy replied.

"Why not?"

"Well, I've got some money now and I can afford it, maybe not afford it but I'll survive though."

"I thought you said we were Soul Brothers."

"We are but, because I'll live some place else doesn't mean that I'm not your Soul Brother."

"Can I visit you... sometimes?"

"Of course man. Listen, you've got to help me find a place to live."

"Time to be, is the cyclotron of potential waiting to be challenged by the pendulum of fate and the grace that moves men".
