Literary Corner

I's been sending you to college for some six or seven years
 Since the day that you left me I's been shedding bitter tears.
 But I thought of that old saying,
 sunshine comes behind a storm
 So you march on off to college and next spring you bring it home.

I's been sweating by the washtub, I's been working in the fields
 Sometimes I had to borrow, and almost had to steal.
 But I held onto my patience, beat those soapsuds into foam
 All the while my heart was saying, he's going to bring that college home.

Folks round here say you're gonna be nothing, just wasting time away
 But I shakes my fist and tells them, just wait until some future day.
 So next spring when dogwoods blossom, and the bees begin to hum
 I'll be waiting for to see you, when you bring that college home.

I don't mean bring home them buildings, nor disturb them good folks place
 You get a Christian education and that high tone college grace.
 Grab them festas habits, hold them tight through wind and storm
 And when you get your diploma, take them all and lite right home.

Show them folks that you has got'em, by the speeches that you make
 By the specs that you're wearing, and the way your coattails shake.
 But don't get above your people, settle down and cease to roam
 Be a light in your own village, be a college here at home.
