Dear Vike,
I don't have a question, but I do have a comment. Recently my girl and I were walking around in the mall, and I glanced at this other chick who had caught my attention and my girl got offended. I explained to her that although the girl had on pretty much nothing, I didn't look because I wanted to sleep with her, but because tight clothes on a girl tend to grab males attention.

I know this may sound contradictory but, although guys look, it doesn't mean that what we see is what we want. I know a lot of females feel that that's how they get our attention, and it is, but like I explained to my girl, a decent guy would rather have a girl who comes off as fly, but also classy, not fly and nasty.

A Decent Brother

Dear A Decent Brother,
I agree with you. Men and women are human, and every now and then our eyes wander. God gave us the sense of sight so we use it. However, it does not mean that we desire everything we see. Continue being a decent man and hopefully she will grow to respect you.

Dear Vike,
I am a student here at ECSU and I feel I was sexually violated by a staff member. I was in the University Center looking at fliers with my back towards the front door. He came up behind me and touched me in places that I didn't feel comfortable and kissed me on my cheek.

I never gave him the indication that he could do that to me. I don't know if I should report this incident to authorities because it could cost him his job. On the other hand I feel no man should have the right to touch a woman without receiving her permission. Please give me some helpful advice.

Violated

Dear Violated,
I am sorry to hear what happened to you. You are a very considerate person, because although this staff member violated you, you are still concerned about his job. However, if he has done this to you, he has probably done this to many considerate people before you who were afraid to speak up, but it has to stop. Approach the authorities and explain to them what happened and your concerns about him losing his job. Make no mistakes about it, what you experienced was sexual harassment. It is time for nice women to speak up and stop being victimized.

A native of Temple Hills, Maryland, Zane Isiah Overton is a freshman at ECSU. He is a computer science major with goals of becoming a computer programmer. During his spare time, Overton enjoys singing in the Pitts Chapel A.M.E. Zion church choir, and he likes listening to all types of music. Overton also enjoys dancing and shopping. His favorite hangout spot on campus is the library. Overton said he is attending ECSU because of its convenience and because he feels that this is a good university. His role models are his mother, he considers her as a positive influence, and Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. Overton said that King was a man who was about change, and if given the opportunity, he would also help change people's tolerance and ignorance and try to get people to love and respect one another. Overton's motto is, "Live life, don't let life live you."

A native of Hollister, North Carolina, Melody Lynch is a freshman at ECSU. The Art Education major is attending ECSU because she wanted to attend a HBCU. Lynch enjoys dancing and shopping. Some of her special talents include drawing and singing R&B music and songs by Mariah Carey. Lynch keeps a drawing notebook. Some of Lynch's affiliations include the Art Guild Club, and she has volunteered with disabled children in the Hollister Reach Program. Lynch's motivation is prayer, and her mother is her role model because of her strength and independence. Lynch's favorite book is One Day My Soul Just Opened Up by Iyanla Vanzant because it is a book that inspired and helped her to better her relationship with others. After college, Lynch plans to become a fashion stylist and author. She wants to write a book that will inspire people who are overweight and suffer from low self-esteem.
