Terror In Atlanta

A few months ago the nation was in a frantic state because 52 Americans were being held hostage in Iran. They were freed and to many Americans, our country was once again in composure. However, this was about as far from the truth as it could be. We all should feel grateful that Iran has let our Americans come home. But what about the black children dying almost daily now in Atlanta, Georgia. It greatly disturbs me because there seems to be a sense of apathy among us when it comes to the issue of these murders.

Each night when the news reveals that another black child has become missing or has been found dead and mutilated a feeling of despair overcomes me. It is unbelievable that so many can be murdered and not even one substantial bit of evidence can be found to capture and convict a murderer. Maybe there is not much we can do as individuals, but as citizens of the United States the least we can do is show concern. Without the country's support, those 52 Americans might still be in Iran. Atlanta cannot accomplish the awesome task of finding a murderer alone. Our support is desperately needed to aid in ending this nightmare. If we become motivated to push this issue, so will the administrators in Washington, D.C.

Please support the fight to save our black children.

(Note: Letters to the editor would be appreciated concerning this issue and others.)

Why College?

When most of us first stepped foot on this campus as students, we were more concerned with personal identity than anything else. How could we represent ourselves in a way that Winston-Salem State University would remember us after we leave.

The first thing that many of us decided to do was to make sure we were seen at all the social functions about campus. If we made an appearance at all the football games, and as many parties as possible, soon everyone was bound to know us. Next, if we joined every extracurricular activity and every club and group this would surely make an impression on the members of the University. So we did.

One becomes so caught in the involvement in these activities that often one thing is forgotten which is our chief purpose for being in college. Many of us neglect our studies or fail to seek career opportunities. Then, just like a bomb, the true issue explodes in our faces. We become seniors and four years of our lives have slipped by. We know everyone on campus and we belong to every well-known organization, but what do we want out of life? Why have we chosen to be here? What have we accomplished and how will it help us to pursue a career?

Therefore, we should all keep in mind at all times the meaning of a college education. We should be involved in extracurricular activities, but not to the point that we miss out on preparing for the future. If one finds that too many outside temptations confront him, he should take heed to our motto: Enter to learn, Depart to serve.
