Minority's Future in Engineering

Do you want to be a part of the minority engineering force of the future? Your chances may be better, thanks to the efforts of a national organization that works for the minority engineering effort year 'round.

Since the National Action Council for Minorities in Engineering began in 1980, its goal has been to increase the number of high quality minority students graduating from engineering schools. To achieve that goal, the organization encourages students to consider engineering as a career. It motivates high school students to study mathematics and science and channels them to engineering schools. Through an incentive grants program, it also offers financial aid to engineering colleges for qualified minority students and links them to jobs in private industry through its summer employment program.

future of our economy. As technically trained professionals they will be in demand to help find solutions to the challenges of productivity, defense and a better life for all citizens.

The Council is a coalition of top ranking corporate and government leaders, university and local pre-college program directors and many other workers in the engineering field.

If you'd like to help shape the priorities for the next decade of the minority engineering effort, write for free information to NACME, Three West 35th Street, Department C, New York, N.Y. 10001.
