Interdenominational Youth for Christ provides needed support for some students

By Tonja Adams
STAFF REPORTER

The Interdenominational Youth For Christ Fellowship is an organization formed to uplift and spread the word of Jesus Christ.

People of all denominations are welcome to join this fellowship organization.

Mother and Father Hammonds founded the Youth Fellowship in 1971. Now run by the students, the group is advised by the university chaplain, Rev. Cedric Rodney. The officers for this year are as follows: president, Jennifer McLamb, vice president, Steve Williamson (Mr. Ram), secretary, Sheri Bratcher, assistant secretary, Lisa Best, and treasurer, Kevin Jackson. The clergymen who frequently attend are Rev. Rodney, Elder Freddie Rountree, Elder Freddie Marshall, Evangelist Angela Collins and Rev. Serenus Churn.

When the members present were asked what being saved was like and how it affects their lives differently than before, Jennifer McLamb said that she is now respected more by her peers than before. She also stated that though it doesn't make her uncomfortable, she feels as if she's looked at more often.

With nods of agreement, Starling Churn added that his life is now more complete than before, and Kevin Jackson stated that it has insured him of never again being lonely. Kevin knows now that he has a friend for life here and after, he said.

Witnessing, the next topic of discussion, seemed to grab the attention of Kevin Ross. Kevin explained that witnessing is just living the life that Jesus lived. Tammy Shipp added that the only way to really explain is to demonstrate, which is why she is a member of the fellowship.

Kevin Ross, Tammy Shipp, Kevin Jackson, Starling Churn and Jennifer McLamb all have a common bond, the belief in Jesus Christ, they said. They are all in agreement that in order to grow, one must have a solid foundation -- the Lord, and the Bible.

Kevin Ross, a junior majoring in Mass Communications said, "I am a part of the fellowship because I need to be with common believers, and I want to grow in Christ." Tammy Shipp, a sophomore, majoring in Business Administration said, "Part of spiritual growth is to be with those who'll help you grow." In order to set a good example for others on campus, and strongly represent the Fellowship group at the same time, Kevin Jackson, a Junior Intermediate Education major said, "Live as Christ said to live in the Bible." Jennifer McLamb, a junior Sociology major, said, "Be an example and let your light shine so men may see your good works."

The Interdenominational Youth For Christ Fellowship meets every Tuesday night at 7:30 p.m. in the Auditorium in the Green room on the campus of Winston-Salem State University.

MCNC's Communications System is a data and two-way color video network that links North Carolina universities. The data network currently connects more than 1,100 computers at these institutions to support research collaboration, while MCNC's video network allows universities to share resources through teleclasses, seminars and teleconferences. The network broadcasts graduate courses in microelectronics as well as evening courses in a variety of subject, including engineering, nursing, library science and health.

The extension of the MCNC Communications System to Winston-Salem is funded by the General Assembly and supported by the University of North Carolina General Administration.

MCNC is a public-private partnership that combines the resources of Duke University, North Carolina A&T State University, North Carolina State University, University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, University of North Carolina at Charlotte and the Research Triangle Institute.

"How to Take a Test" is also a valuable book when preparing for an examination. Choosing a good seat, giving the test your complete attention and listening carefully are just a few of the helpful hints provided by this book.

Both books are in the enrichment center.

When this study and review process is followed, Ms. Green said, the result is a successful final examination.

Janet Pierce is a senior majoring in mass communications.
