arrested on charges of drug trafficking. His punishment for the crime was 20 years in prison; however, he received a reprieve when the Florida State Court ordered a retrial on the grounds that important evidence of entrapment was not allowed to be presented. He was released from prison on June 12, 1986.

"Success is not always a good teacher," he pointed out, speaking on the wealth and fame he generated from his professional career. Once he realized he had a problem and took accountability for it, then, he says, God gave him the help he so desperately needed.

"Drugs can't do nothing that you don't want them to do. No one can end up in the house of use until he travels the road of abuse."

Fortunately for Morris, he realized that the route he was taking only provided him with a one-way ticket to the pits of destruction, and soon he became aware of the one important factor that changed his life completely: "I had the Lord Jesus Christ through the whole thing."

Quoting I John 1:9, he said, "If you confess your sins, He's faithful and just to forgive you of your sins, and cleanse you from all unrighteousness."

The News Argus. Thomas, who is from Salisbury, N.C., said, "I will continue with the tradition of this position but will make some changes if necessary." Thomas added that he would like to have additional photos covering the events on campus. In high school, Thomas was a feature writer for the school paper and was on The News Argus staff last semester covering various events.

Thomas, who is a born-again

Christian, is also actively involved in other school organizations such as: Brothers in Christ, Interdenominational Youth for Christ Fellowship, and President of the Student Union Activities/Student Union Program Board. "I chose WSSU because it has a small student body population which makes us closely knit, I really like it here."

His ambition is to become a journalist/novelist writing fiction with a Christian theme.
