St. Augustine's Trainer's Program

Athletic Training is the care and prevention of athletic injuries. This simple statement is not so simple in execution.

With a little vision, the student can see that injury can be mental as well as physical. For example, if an athlete skins his knees, there is a definite procedure for cleaning and dressing the wound. Now what about the skinned feelings caused by hazing off fellow players? There is no prescribed treatment for this type injury. But we know there are some of these cases every day of practice.

The old saying that "AN OUNCE OF PREVENTION IS WORTH A POUND OF CURE," is not only true but also an understatement. Take the case that happened last year during a basketball game. The leading scorer ran down the court to get a rebound, tore a cartilage in his knee and was out six games of the season. Whose fault? Isn't it clear that this is under prevention of athletic injury?

Does this mean that the athletic trainer is responsible for the safety element on equipment, courts and fields, dress-quarters, the mental attitude of the athlete, as well as care on injuries? Knowledge of all these conditions certainly come under "PREVENTION OF ATHLETIC INJURY." It is an individual problem of the school as to who does the work to correct dangerous conditions.

The whole point here is to emphasize that the care and prevention of athletic injury is a larger field that will need the cooperation of everyone from the lowest scrub to the college administration.

The student trainer, the coach, and the team physician should be a team; a team as important as the center, quarterback, and fullback is to football. They must work together, play by the same set of signals and rules, and perfect their timing to the best advantage to help the boy who is participating in athletics.
