always going to have envious people trying to hold you down yet, you have to be stronger than that and have a positive attitude."

Eventually all of the goals she set for herself started falling into place.

She is currently a member of the Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority and is the captain of the Blue Chips Cheerleading Squad. She is also doing an internship at FOX22 television station, and working full-time at the YMCA.

Lloyd keeps herself busy and active.

"Personally, I don't know who Miss St. Aug is, or what her duties are," said Derrick Boyd, sophomore, computer information, New York. "Maybe she is fulfilling her duties, but many students are unaware of them. I feel she needs more publicity amongst the school."

Lloyd knows she can not please everyone and is aware that someone is always going to be negative to say. However, Lloyd knows she is doing her job as a Tameka man, math education, Bahamas, says, her, and she is thing to make She should have meeting explaining who she is, what she does, and what her purposes are. She should also have activities to grasp our attention. Miss St. Aug should have a better relationship with the student body, especially us new students."

"It's not that she's not active, she's just not known. She is not as popular as past queens, but she is doing her job," says Momolu Murray, senior, marketing, New Jersey.

The Coronation of Miss Saint Augustine's College took place on Saturday October 24, 1998. The theme for the occasion was "One Moment in Paradise."

When Lloyd thinks of paradise, she doesn't think of being on an island or beach, she imagines something heavenly. She realizes she can't always be a queen, so this will be one moment for her to cherish.

Miss St. Aug challenges the student body to be more unified and have school pride. She feels you should love your school and be proud to be a Falcon.

"...love your school and be proud to be a Falcon."

that comes out of this cafe?"

Beard responds, "Girl, just let me drink my soda, then we can go."

To some students the cafeteria is supposed to be a place where they can go to eat, socialize with friends, and maybe do some studying. But they expect less at the St. Aug cafeteria.

Some of the workers are rude, the food is sometimes half cooked, and the dishes are dirty. Another problem that the students faces is the cold temperature in the dining area.

The EBSCO offers access to both full text of data bases, abstracting and index databases.

The CARL Nove List is an on-line reader advisory tool that helps readers find new books based on the related topic of interest.

OCLC First Search gives you access to multiple databases. While the Silver Platter WebSP/R3 takes one whom is interested in the field of psychology to the wide range of information on the related subject.

Paula Dione Ingram

Famed opera singer, Paula Dionne-Ingram graced the audience with a few of her favorite selections in the Seby Jones Theater on Noember 5, 1998.

I had several doubts about the performance, having never listen to opera before, however, I was pleasantly surprised about what I witnessed. It was definitely a night to remember.

For an hour, we were mesmerized with Ingrams' rich and emotional laden voice. Ingram thrilled the crowd with a variety of selection from Puccini of the Turandot, to excerpts from Porgy and Bess, to Negro Spirituals and finally closed with the old gospel hymn, "He's got the whole world in his hand."

The songstress captivated the audience with her soulful voice and thought provoking melodies. The show was not only breathtaking, but dynamic.

The highlight of Ingrams' career was when she did the lead in Camon Jones on London's West End, which is equivalent to Broadway. She also runs a role modeling program in Missouri and regularly interact with students at Indiana University.

Ingram commented on her advice she would give to young singers when she said, "Whatever job you have it is a performance and that nothing can stop you, but you."

She goes on further to say, "The more you see, the more you experience, the more you appreciate."

mester to address the concerns mentioned.

Students are also trying to start their own organization called, Student Cafeteria Concerns (SCC). The organization's focus is to help encourage other students to speak their complaints about the dining facilities.

For example, if someone feels that his or her meat is uncooked, or your bread it too hard, then the workers should accommodate the students by giving them another piece of meat, or a fresh piece of bread.

So, if the SCC is successful, the line for the cafeteria should soon reach the Hunter Building.

James Boldsworth, a student commented, "I used the program and it has helped me out a lot, although I feel that the library staff and the college could have done a better job in promoting the program, but this is why you must explore on your own."

"NC Live is offered in the library to everyone. Each student should try this program, said Lunsford.

Tyshea Isbell, freshman, Elementary Education stated, "I never heard of the program until now."

Tamara Bank, senior, Art, stated "Most of my research was done with NC Live and it saved me time and trouble of looking for the books that we lack."

The goals for NC Live are:

* universal access to core group of reference and research materials on-line in the form of full-text electronic information and indexes.

* unlimited access to digital versions of important historical documents and the state government information.

Pebbles Garret, Erica Lytle, Roderick Miller, and Charity Woods.

Miller and Woods studied in Seville, Spain; Garrett in Montpellier, France and Lytle studied in several cities of Ghana.

"The experience was worth while. I would do it again, at a drop of a dime," says Garrett, junior, communication, Raleigh.

Garrett has been studing French since her sophomore year in high school and decided to study in France because she wanted to become more fluent with the language and get a feel of the French culture.

Garrett had to raise money for her trip so she did such things as sell art, roller skating parties, and a car wash.

There are plans for two other St. Aug students to participate in the program next year, and the Department of International Studies will hold its Third Annual International Awareness-Career Day on November 20, 1998.

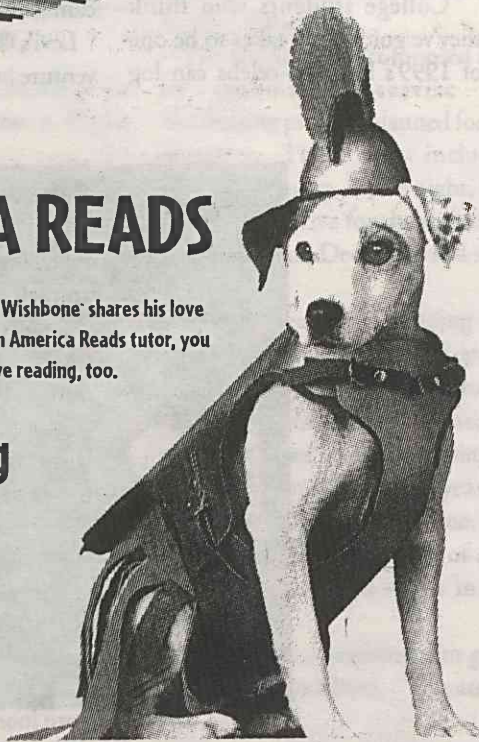

If anyone is interested in participating in the study abroad program, or want more information, contact Di Bona at 516-4136 in Boyer building, 3rd floor in the Department of International Studies.
