

Jili Jenkins rescues a child from the barrel as Makom Shearin looks on. Toys for the Raleigh Road Head Start are a luxury to some of the children who use them.

Mrs. Sharon Unterwagner and her five and six year olds listen to Malcom Shearin play the zither. For some, this small exposure to a cultural experience is all that they have in their young lives.

Martha Bynum shows a four year old girl how to complete a puzzle. Through Head Start, many of these children get their only chance to learn things that many of their future classmates learn at home.

After playtime, the children have learned to "wash up" before a story and mealtime.

Mrs. Rose Hunter, who is in charge of the three and four year olds, reads a story to the children while waiting for lunch.

Before beginning to eat, everyone says grace. To some this is their only decent meal all day. After lunch the three and four year olds take a nap for two hours while the five and six year olds only nap for an hour. The younger children play after their nap while waiting to be picked up. The older ones have a "class session" then play time and go home about 4:30 or 5:00.

Jili plays with a child during the morning recess period. Few of the children have older brothers or sisters who will or can take the time to play with them.
