by a dangerous artificial consensus. Both of these attributes eradicate any unwanted changes or usurpation.

Becton expanded on two more issues. He praised the role of the Wesleyan group goes on ski trip

On Jan. 30-31, several Wesleyan students went skiing at the Massanutten Resort near Harrisonburg, Va. Those who participated were Jason Barrios, Kenny Bowers, Lee Brickhouse, Kari Kettner, Mac McCauley, Christina Nemetz, Greg Robbins, Eric Schreiber, and Chris Walters.

The staff members who accompanied the students on the trip were Pam Yourley, Director of Recreational Sports, and Anthony Rice, Director of Student Activities.

The students considered the trip a great recreational experience. For some, it was their first time snow skiing and within hours they were all on the expert slopes.

Another ski trip, a day trip to the North Carolina mountains, was planned for last Sunday.

Supreme Court and articulated on the underlying intention of the Constitution. The Framers had the foresight to know that their document, in order to be successful, must be competently interpreted. For this purpose, the judicial branch of government took a strong role in interpreting the Constitution for the good of society as a whole. Finally, the basic premise of the Constitution is not to provide a code of life, but rather to provide a philosophy of life that revolves around liberty.

The final topic covered by Judge Becton was possible threats to the Constitution. One example is the precarious growth of power in the executive branch of government. The weakening of political parties poses a second obstacle. Unlike the contrasting two-party system originally characteristic of American politics, there has been a recent lessening of party consciousness in contemporary American society.

The strength of Becton's reasoning came from eight conclusions drawn about why the Constitution is still a healthy, working prototype legal document. He rounded out the argument by pointing out viable threats to the future prosperity of the Constitution.

Wesleyan College Players to perform one-act plays

The North Carolina Wesleyan College Players are presenting "A Night of One Acts" tonight and tomorrow night at 8 p.m.

The performance of three one-act plays is highlighted by two plays written by members of the Wesleyan community.

"Man in the Pine-Striped Universe" was written by Matt McKown, a junior from Charlottesville, Va. According to Vaughn Schutz, director of the theatre, the play is about the rights of patients and the issue of doctors playing God. Freshman Alan Felton plays the Doctor, John Cradle is the patient, and Halie Hendricks plays a nurse. McKown is also directing the production.

"Non-Threatening Behavior" was written by Dr. Steve Ferebee, assistant professor of English and director of the Honors Program. Schutz, who directs this one-act play, says "Non-Threatening Behavior" is an interesting character study with a political statement. Sophomore Maxine Dwyer, who has the lead role, and Ferebee both make their NCWC acting debuts.

Finally, the evening closes with "The Duck Variations" by David Mamet, a comedy about 14 variations of two old men talking about ducks. Also directed by Schutz, "The Duck Variations" stars Alan Felton in his first performance at NCWC and Gene Downs, a resident of Rocky Mount and reviewer for the Rocky Mount Evening Telegram.

Nash Dorm takes Trivial Pursuit title

A Trivial Pursuit Tournament was held on Feb. 7 in Nash and North Residence Halls. The games were played using teams of two.

In Nash Hall, the following teams competed: Chris Ostling and Rand Wisniewsky, Mike Trubey and Jerry Hufton, Bobby Price and Doug Edgeworth, and Kris Combs and Matt McKown.

After two hours and 40 minutes of play, Bobby Price and Doug Edgeworth were declared the winners.

In North Hall, the teams consisted of Dewey Clark and Tom Rivers, Lee Brickhouse and Teresa Harris, and Kevin Dodderidge and Barry Nethercutt. Clark and Rivers won by giving the correct answer to an entertainment question, after playing for one hour and 15 minutes.

The Nash and North winners squared off on Feb. 9 in the cafeteria. The teams played a blazing round in less than 30 minutes. Bobby Price and Doug Edgeworth emerged as the all-campus winners.
