

THE INSIDER

Greetings and salutations to all of my friends and foes. Insider is back after missing the deadline for the last edition of The Decree. It seems I was a little annihilated the night before the deadline and I failed to write my article. But I promise to make this one extra special to make up for my absence.

First order of business, the Editor's article. Well written guys, bravo! Also a pat on the back to Stewart Crank for his intelligent editorial.

Next, a big thank you to our Dean of Student Life for the letters in our mailboxes. We students appreciate your efforts to prohibit us from having bonfires. After all, we are "immature drunken children", isn't that correct Michele Carpenter? Don't think Insider has forgotten about your slanderous opinion. I'll deal with you in a minute.

On second thought, Insider will destroy you now. As Insider was first reading your article, Insider's initial thought was to just laugh and forget about you. I mean really, your not worth the effort. But as Insider read over and over again the slanderous comments you made about my character, well lets just say I got a little pissed. If you want to criticize my opinion or work, that's peachy keen with me. But you crossed the line by attacking my character. It seems as though you went to a great deal of trouble to pick apart my article. Well let me return the favor.

First of all, last time Insider checked, his/her belly was a sensous golden brown, not yellow. Chicken scratch you say, well, Insider makes it a practice to never let farm animals inside his/her drom room. They are rather foul creatures. Thirdly, Michele, if I may call you that, Insider is not a wimp. Insider would be glad to meet you anywhere, anytime, to give you a good ole' country butt whoopin. After reading your article, Insider thinks he has a pretty good idea of what kind of person you are. I bet you were a hall monitor in high-school, maybe even president of the debating team. You probably studied every weekend and had few friends. You had a difficult childhood because all the children picked on you, you weren't part of the cool crowd. You were probably an OUTSIDER, as you are now. Let Insider tell the students now that Michele Carpenter is not a student here, but a graduate from Wake Forest who works in the Public Information office.

Insider quotes Webster, "Freedom: exemption or liberation from the control of some other person or some arbitrary power". Freedom can exist without protective rules. In fact, true freedom is the absence of rules. You can have freedom without rules, but it's harder to appreciate.

Ms. Carpenter, and I do assume it's Ms., seems to think that the visitation policy is good. Of course she does, she doesn't have to follow it. Insider thinks it's fine that Chinamen are taxed if they produce more than two offspring, but Insider doesn't have to live by that rule. It's easy to be on the OUTSIDE looking in, isn't it Ms. Carpenter?

According to Michele, we are all sinners, who should change our ways. I assume Michele is good Christian, or so she thinks.
