Vol. XXVII No. 3

Adams-Millis Corporation

June-July, 1971

SUPERVISOR OF THE MONTH

Fast making a name for himself in the High Point Industrial Management Club of High Point is Velton Hall, shipping supervisor of the ladies' hosiery division of Adams-Millis in High Point. Last month, he received the Key Man of the Year Award; and, he has been selected as

Velton Hall

Key Man Committee Chairman for the coming year. The club designated Velton as "Personality of the Month" for June.

The purpose of the Industrial Management Club is to develop its members personally and be of definite help to them in the discharge of their responsibilities as supervisors.

The Key Man serves as the connecting link between his company and the club. He sounds out the club members in his company for suggestions concerning the activities and programs of the club. The Key Man then reports this accumulated information to the club's executive committee.

Velton has been in the shipping department for two years. He was previously employed at the old Grimes Street plant of Adams-Millis for about two years after coming out of service in 1958. He was shipping clerk for Ragan Knitting Mills in Thomasville and worked for four years in the shipping department of Maurice Mills prior to his last employment with Adams-Millis. He was also employed as a baker by Thomasville's Bost Bakery for six years--and, by the way, he says he's a very good cook.

Born in Thomasville, Velton Hall attended Kern Street Elementary School and then graduated from Main Street School in 1957. He held a part-time job in a grocery store while attending school. Upon his graduation, he entered the U. S. Army and served in communications for six months at Fort Jackson, S. C. and Fort Chaffee, Arkansas. Upon his release from the Army, he was with the North Carolina National Guard for six and one-half years.

Velton is married to the former Darlene Frye of Sanford, N. C. He has three children. There are two daughters: Jateena, age 6, and Kimberly, age one and one-half; and one son, Alex, who is six months old. He and Mrs. Hall live at 123 Council Street in Thomasville.

As for hobbies, Velton plays golf and chess; he also enjoys bird hunting in Randolph and Davidson Counties, but rarely finds time any more to engage in this sport.

Three Named To NAHM Post

Three officials of Adams-Millis Corporation have been named to posts in the National Association of Hosiery Manufacturers. James H. Millis, president of Adams-Millis Corporation, has been elected to Second Vice Chairman; and, by virtue of that office, Mr. Millis is a member of the board of directors.

Donald G. Lindner, president of Adams-Millis Hosiery Company, has been appointed a member of the NAHM Socks and Anklets Committee. H. O. Williams, comptroller for Adams-Millis, has been appointed a member of the NAHM Air and Water Pollution Committee to study problems as they relate to hosiery production.

Quality Excellence Award Received

For the sixth consecutive year, Adams-Millis Corporation has received the Symbol of Excellence Award from Sears, Roebuck and Company. The presentation was made by Phil S. Kessler, hosiery buyer for Sears, at a luncheon at the String and Splinter Club in High Point on April 21. Accepting the award for the company was Robert L. Boyles, director of manufacturing of the half-hose division.

The coveted award was made in recognition of the outstanding performance of Adams-Millis Corporation's management and employees in manufacturing superior quality products for Sears for six years.
