A lady was reading to her little granddaughter about how a chicken is hatched. She said, "Isn't it wonderful how baby chicks get out of their shells?"

"What I don't understand," the child answered, "is how they get in!"

CHECK THE HUMIDITY

Properly humidified air will make you feel comfortable at lower temperatures. A relative humidity of 35% to 40% is desirable in most homes. This level can be measured by an inexpensive hygrometer.

Honesty Brings Its Own Reward . . .

Whatever your sphere in life, you are sure to find it one of temptation. You need watchfulness and resolution. Guard against dishonesty, even in the smallest matters. Avoid the things that lead to it--drink and extravagance, betting and gambling, and improper associations. Look upon your employer's interests as if they were your own.

"You must give me good measure," said a customer to a young man clerk one day, "your boss is not in."

"My boss is always in," answered the young man, looking seriously at the customer.

Honesty brings its own reward. Sometimes the reward may assume the form least expected. A clerk was directed by his employer to answer a letter countermanding a previous order of goods, by saying that they had been already shipped. It was false; and the clerk refused to write the lie. Instead of being turned away, as he thought not improbable, he was made confidential clerk. Honesty's reward may not always come in that shape; but there will always be an enriched character, and a good conscience.

Expediency

An irate employee went to the paymaster and carefully counted the money in his pay envelope. "It's one dollar short! What's the meaning of this!"

The paymaster checked a record sheet and, smiling broadly, replied: "Last week we overpaid you a dollar. You didn't complain about the mistake then, did you?"

"An occasional mistake I can overlook," answered the employee, "but not two mistakes in a row!"
