

Estelle Caviness Retires

ESTELLE CAVINESS

A tiny little lady who is in her 28th year of service with Anvil Brand is retiring this month and is looking forward to the coming years with as much enthusiasm as she displayed when she first started to work here over a quarter century ago.

"Six months ago I thought I would be awfully let down at the idea of retiring," Rebecca Estelle Caviness said last week. "But now that I've adjusted to the idea, I'm really looking forward to it."

So, come December 24, Estelle will be 65 years old and on that day she will retire.

What are her plans?

She isn't sure. Perhaps she and her husband will move to the country; she says she has plenty of relatives with ample land.

Group Makes Suggestions For Safety

The current safety committee held its final meeting last week when members made suggestions for improving possibly unsafe conditions in the plants.

Among the suggestions were the need for a container at the machines to hold personal belongings such as purse, shoes and scissors.

Other suggestions included posting details of accidents which occur on bulletin boards so all employees may learn how they occurred and thus work toward not having the same accident re-occur; inspecting tables for splinters and broken places; always calling the bundle boys to raise windows and avoid sitting on both sides of the stairs to

"I'll have plenty to occupy my mind," she laughed. "Right now we've got 30 hens that keep us busy—and there'll be plenty of other work for me, too."

Keeping these hens stems from the fact that Estelle was born in Randolph County on a farm. And although she has lived these many years in the city, her first love is a farm. She likes the country, growing things and raising animals.

In her many years' service with the company Estelle has had only one lengthy illness: an appendectomy which kept her out of work seven weeks. "I've been awfully lucky," she says.

Her jobs have included folding and pressing, inspecting and the job she leaves is folding.

14 GRANDCHILDREN

Her husband, Wade Caviness, is a carpenter and she has three children, two boys and a girl. She also has 14 grandchildren and nine great-grandchildren.

Estelle is a member of Archdale Baptist Church which plays an important part in her life. She lives in Archdale near the church and attends twice each Sunday. "It's so nice to live so close to my church," she said. "This would be one of the main reasons I would choose to stay in Archdale rather than move to the country."

Estelle, in talking about leaving, said: "I enjoyed working for Sherrod and for Anvil Brand and I wish everybody connected with the company the best luck in the world."

Everybody at Anvil Brand wishes the best of everything for Estelle, too.

smoke.

Ossie Wright, safety director, commended the committee for their work and their observations necessary to bring such suggestions to the safety department's attention.

All departments except four received 100 per cent safety grades this month. Those falling below the perfect grade included Printing, Ladies I, Pants I and Pants II.

FRYE HEADS DRIVE

Paul Frye of Traffic was co-chairman of the highly successful YMCA drive which was concluded here recently. Other Anvil Branders working with him were Doug Tate, Richard Wade and Arthur Royals.

Paul reported some 2,006 members were secured for the "Y," which is the largest membership in its history.

GOODNESS SAKES — As we live and breathe it's Mama Mona Bryant kissing Santa Claus. This is the surest way we know of to assure a visit from Santa Claus.

New Supervisor Is Appointed

Frances Workman, who has had approximately 13 years' service with Anvil Brand, had been made a supervisor, Aline Carter, personnel director, has announced.

Frances has been a training supervisor for about six years and prior to that time had marked for fly buttons and hemmed bottoms.
