Cobb said that he and the Homecoming Committee are "very pleased" with the spirit and efficiency with which the homecoming activities were carried out. He further lauded the students for the dignity and restraint shown when emotions had reason to be high.

Reflecting on students' past action at homecoming activities, the SGA president added. "I want to commend the students for the admirable way in which they conducted themselves during the emotion-packed activities. I did not observe," he went on, "any violent acts, or any repugnances between the students and guests. At the unchaperoned activities, the students conducted themselves in a dignified and respectable manner, which goes to show that we as students can have good clean fun without being watched over as children," Cobb concluded.

The homecoming activities began Wednesday morning, October 21, with students wearing maroon and gray apparel, signifying school loyalty. But the four-day festivities were not kicked-off until Wednesday
