

History Dept. Sets TV Plans

The History Department of North Carolina College will offer several telecourses in history next year.

Dr. Thorpe, chairman of the History Department says that plans are now being made to teach Social Science 110 and Social Science 120 (Foundation of Western Civilization) by television.

Right now, there are only two courses being taught by television, English 110 and English 120 (English Composition). The addition of history will be the second area of study taught on television.

Thorpe said that the telecourse will most likely be a multiteacher situation in which several areas of history will be taught by individual teachers. He indicated that one teacher would teach Ancient Civilization while another would teach the French Revolution.

Department members are now engaged in weekly meetings, but major decisions will be made during the summer. However, there is already in preparation a telecourse study guide for students taking Social Science next year.

Thorpe did not indicate who the television teacher would be because of the lack of training history teachers had for this type of work, but he did say that the number of teachers would be no more than five.

Boulware Elected State AAUP Head

Dr. Elwood Boulware, associate professor of mathematics, was elected president of the state body of University Professors at the eighteenth annual meeting at Misenheimer, N. C., March 6.

North Carolina College representatives at the meeting were Dr. Boulware; Dr. Charles A. Ray, Chairman of the Department of English, and president of the North Carolina College chapter of AAUP; Dr. Benjamin Smith, librarian; and Dr. Edward Farrison, professor of English.

NCC's resolution passed against the Speaker Ban Law met state opposition before representatives from 26 colleges and universities.

Drs. Ray and Boulware are expected to attend the national meeting of AAUP in Washington, D. C., April 8-12.

INTERNATIONAL COED GROUP—Four University of North Carolina graduate students from as many countries appeared on a Coffee and Conversation Hour held in connection with the 16th Annual Coed Weekend. From left are Yasyko Ichihishi of Japan; Gisela Trommsdorff of Germany; Sylvia Sharpe, president of the NCC Women's Assembly which sponsored the program; Christine DeTorre of Colombia; Fatma Ramozmoglu of Turkey; and Jeanne Cheek of NCC.

In keeping with the theme of the three-day celebration: "The Responsibility of College Women in Building Good International Relations as a Basis for World Peace," the foreign students spoke on the role of women in their respective countries.

Sixteenth Coed Weekend Has International Focus

The role of women in international relationships was spotlighted as North Carolina College coeds were treated to a weekend of festivities during the Sixteenth Annual Coed Weekend held Friday, March 12 through Sunday, March 14.

Following the theme, "The Responsibility of College Women in Building Good International Relations as a Basis for World Peace," the North Carolina College Women's Assembly featured several government officials and experts on international relations, foreign students attending the University of North Carolina and North Carolina College female faculty members.

Friday, beginning at 7:30 p.m. in four of the College's buildings, a series of coffee and conversation hours presented special guests from the University of North Carolina—Miss Fatma Ramozmoglu from Turkey, Miss Gisela Trommsdorff from Germany, Miss Yasyko Ishihishi from Japan, and Miss Christine DeTorre from Colombia. The UNC students discussed their countries, hitting the high points and afterwards entertained questions from the floor. North Carolina College faculty members served as interrogation leaders, and the women students served as presiding officers at the various sessions.

On Saturday, the morning session began at 10:30 a.m. in B. N. Duke Auditorium, featuring as guest speakers, Dr. Marion Forrester, Department of State, Division of Commercial Policy, Office of International Trade, Bureau of Economic Affairs, Washington, D. C.; Mrs. Alex Quaison-Sackey, Ghana, wife of the President of the United Nations General Assembly, New Rochelle, New York, and Mrs. Lillian Alurralde, attache, Argentine Embassy, Washington, D. C.

Dr. Forrester centered her remarks around the theme and ended by saying, "You must give yourself to the community in helping others." Mrs. Quaison-Sackey pointed out in her remarks that if you educate a boy, you have educated an individual, if you educate a girl, you have educated the nation. Children, who are greatly influenced by women are leaders of tomorrow. In Mrs. Alurralde's remarks she stated that education, citizenship, professional service and progress go hand in hand.

The Saturday afternoon session began at 2 p.m. with a Charm Clinic in B. N. Duke Auditorium. Representatives, Mrs. Mary Walecki and Mrs. Ruth McGusin, from the Patricia Stevens Career College and Finishing School, included in their discussion, tips on posture when walking, sitting and standing; dress lengths, and make up. A reception followed at New Resident Hall.

Sunday evening marked the final day of the Annual Coed Weekend as popular singing star Johnny Nash performed at the Coed Supper held in R. L. McDougald Gymnasium. With a twinkle in his eye and a chuckle in his throat, he let go with a boom, songs anticipated by the audience, including "Star Dust," "Moon River," "Island in the Sun," and "Fever." Among the special guests awarded corsages were Mrs. Harvey Beech, a member of the North Carolina

HUNDREDS MOURN—1200 students from NCC, Duke and the University of N. C. assembly on the steps of the Durham Post Office Saturday, March 3, in protest of the brutality upon civil rights fighters in Selma, Alabama. The death of Rev. Reeb, of the Unitarian faith, motivated the demonstration.

Students Protest Selma Brutality

By J. T. Clemons

A throng of 1200 civil rights advocates from North Carolina College, Duke University and the University of North Carolina jammed the steps of the Durham Post Office Saturday, March 13 dramatizing racial tension in Selma, Alabama.

The spark for Saturday's march was the murder of Rev. James J. Reeb, 38, a white Unitarian Minister from Boston, Mass. Reeb was beaten by four white men from Selma and later died in a local hospital.

Robert Moorman, leader of the group stated, "Selma is far away, but murder, prejudice, and the effect it has upon society is forever present. We cannot go to Selma, nor can we solve the problem here in Durham; however, we can march in memory and in hope that the Federal Government will go to Selma and solve the real problem there."

The civil rights marchers left the college campus at 1:30 p.m.,

marching up Fayetteville Street to Main Street where they split into three groups at the Chapel Hill and Mangum Street intersection.

At 2:15 p.m. the crowd jammed the Durham Post Office steps, singing "We Shall Not Be Moved," and "We Shall Overcome."

Some of the striking signs that illustrated the civil rights marchers feelings were: "Send Wallace back to South Africa," "Voting Rights For All," "Troops in Viet Nam," "Silence in Selma," and "Did Goldwater Win the Election?"

There were several speakers and personalities from the Durham area. The general theme of the speeches advocated stronger action and policies in Selma, Alabama.

Durham attorney Floyd B. McKissick, National Chairman of the Congress of Racial Equality, and Reverend J. N. Hughley, North Carolina College Minister, were also present.

PUNCH—COED STYLE—Jacqueline Jones, Fayetteville, is shown serving punch to coeds Alice Jenkins, Roanoke Rapids; Gwendolyn Gilmore, Reidsville; and Faye Sutton, Henderson, at a reception during NCC's Coed Weekend.

The observance, sponsored by the Women's Assembly, followed the theme "The Responsibility of College Women in Building Good International Relations as a Basis for World Peace." and featured four international women as symposium participants.
