

DINING HALL VIEWS—The scenes above show the new North Carolina College dining hall, which is currently unfinished but is scheduled to open in September. On the top row, from left to right, are Robert P. Smith, food services director, examining the exterior of the building with Miss Inez Coleman, food services supervisor; an interior of the building; the exterior of the building as seen from Lawson Street. The center row shows, from left: a long shot of the serving area, a closer view of the same scene, Smith and Miss Coleman looking into one of the ovens in the kitchen. On the bottom row: another view of the kitchen, the serving area, and a view of the main entrance looking south.

Dining Hall To Have New 'Pay As You Go' Plan

A "pay as you go" plan will be introduced with the opening of the new Dining Hall in September, according to Robert Smith, North Carolina College's food services director.

Previously, on-campus undergraduates have had to pay in advance. Under the new plan, they will pay only for meals eaten.

Smith said the new dining hall is equipped to seat 900 persons and to feed 28 persons a minute, seven through each of four lines. Students will return trays to a conveyer belt which will carry them to the dish room in the new air-conditioned facility.

In spite of the cafeteria's being designed for speedier service, Smith warns that dawdling students, trying to decide on rather have, might cause lines to "back-up" as much as they do in the present dining hall. "Everyone," he said, "has to put emphasis on speed — moving through the line in a hurry."

The new structure will cost some $700,000 and is 206 feet, 10 inches wide and 131 feet, four inches deep.

Smith indicated he has put emphasis on the use of "flashy colors," feeling the dining hall should be a place "to awaken the student after he has been in conservative classrooms" and other similarly decorated surroundings. The building has two lobbies equipped with upholstered seats, coat-book racks, and bulletin boards. There are also two rest rooms each for men and women and public telephones available for patrons.

He added that he hopes the new facility will be regarded more as a dining hall than a cafeteria. "I feel that a dining hall orientation gives a warmer and more desirable 'home feeling,'" he said.

John D. Latimer and Associates of Durham were architects and engineers for the building.

Smith said the current dining hall will be used as a recreation center and to provide office space for student groups when the new building is opened.

Institutes Bring Special Consultants

The two institutes at North Carolina College designed to prepare teachers of disadvantaged youth scheduled during the summer a total of seven specialists in various fields as lecturers, a report by Dr. Joseph P. McKelvin, director of the institutes, reveals.

The institutes—an NDEA Institute for Teachers of Disadvantaged Youth, and a preservice teacher program sponsored by the National Teacher Corps—enrolled 86 persons and will end July 29 and August 5, respectively.

The final lecturer, scheduled to address the groups Monday through Thursday, July 18-21, was Dr. Robert Spaulding, director, Education Improvement Project, Duke University, whose subject was intelligence, experience, and academic competence.

Others in the series were Dr. Donald J. Stedman, coordinator of research and evaluation of the Educational Improvement Program at Duke, who discussed psychological and sociological aspects of cultural disadvantage; Dr. Harry Rivlin, dean of teacher education of the City University of New York, whose topic was "Compensating for Culturally Induced Behavioral Disabilities;" and Dr. Edgar Epps, research associate, the Institute for Social Research, the University of Michigan, who spoke on interpersonal relationships and personality development.

Welcome Bryant, coordinator, Compensatory Education, of Omaha, Nebraska, spoke July 14-15 on the topic, "Compensating for Culturally Induced Behavioral Disabilities."

Dr. Fred Strodtbeck, of the Department of Sociology of the University of Chicago, scheduled to speak on interpersonal relations and personality development on July 11-12, was unable to appear because of the current airline strike.

Dr. Paul D. Fiddleman, research psychiatrist at the John Umstead Hospital, Butner, is listed as a resource person scheduled to meet both groups in July and August.

NDEA-NTC CONSULTANT—Dr. Robert Spaulding, standing, director, Education Improvement Project, Duke University, talks with participants in the NDEA and NTC institutes on intelligence, experience, and academic competence. Seated, left to right, are Mrs. Mable Harris, Mrs. Thelma Bass, Mrs. Enid Smith, and Richard Simpson.