Drug abuse in the Durham community and specifically on the campus of North Carolina Central University has reached such proportions that some positive action seemed necessary.

Dean of Men, J. D. Lennon discussed the problem with the president of NCCU Student Government Association during the summer of 1970. As a result, Jerry Walker, president of the SGA, agreed to lend his support and the support of his office in getting NCCU students involved in working to alleviate the problem.

Dean Lennon contacted the Durham Redevelopment Commission and requested that one of their houses be leased to this group. The Commission approved the leasing of the house at 516 Nelson Street across from the Student Union Building in NCCU's campus. After several discussions which included community citizens and NCCU students, a name for the organization was decided upon; it was to be called "Citizens United Against Drug Abuse."

Kenneth Beckford was elected to serve as executive director; Charles Davis, deputy director; and Willie Finch, Jr., treasurer. A list of names was presented from which to select a board of directors. After contacts with persons recommended, the board was chosen to handle the affairs of the organization.

Application was then made and received for incorporation papers with the Department of the State, as a non-profit corporation operating under the
