

Charles Frenzel Succeeds J. Minetree Pyne

A familiar face has been missing from Duke Hospital since April first. Mr. Minetree Pyne became Superintendent of Alamance County Hospital in Burlington, N. C., on that date. Assistant Superintendent at Duke Hospital for the past seven years, Mr. Pyne had spent two years before that from 1946-1948 at Duke studying hospital administration.

Mr. Pyne moved to Durham in 1933 from Lynchburg, Virginia, and was graduated from Durham High School and the University of North Carolina. He served a tour of duty with the Army during World War II. Before joining the administrative staff at Duke in January 1949, he served six months as assistant hospital administration consultant with the North Carolina Medical Care Commission. He is married to the former Jessie Ormond of Durham. The Pynes have four children. At the same time that congratulations and good wishes follow the Pynes to Burlington, the Duke family feels a real sense of loss at their departure.

Joining the Administrative staff to take up Mr. Pyne's duties, is Charles H. Frenzel, Jr., former director of the North Carolina Study Commission on Financing Hospital Care. Immediately before coming to Duke on April first, Mr. Frenzel held the post of assistant director at City Memorial Hospital, Winston-Salem. Like Mr. Pyne, Mr. Frenzel is a graduate of the Duke Hospital course in hospital administration.

A native of Jamaica, Long Island, New York, he received the A.B. degree and completed a year of graduate work at Duke before entering the administrative training program in 1949. Mr. Frenzel served four and a half years in the Army from 1941-1946. In addition to the post with the North Carolina Study Commission, Mr. Frenzel was director of a similar study sponsored by the South Carolina Hospital Association and Medical Association. He also held the post of administrator of the Bedford County Hospital, Bedford, Virginia for two years before going on to Winston-Salem.

Mr. Frenzel is married to the former Virginia Joan LeGlise. They have a son, James Charles, age 10. Mrs. Frenzel and James will follow Mr. Frenzel to Durham later.
