

Miss Dot Wilkinson, Hanes House counselor for many years, thoroughly enjoys her many girls. Here student officers Dee Lethco, Evelyn Havens (President) and Anne Dix confer in Miss Wilkinson's Hanes House apartment.

Part of the senior-year Public Health course includes weekly visits to the Lincoln Hospital Well Baby Clinic. Here Betsy Woodhall and Mary Denyes assist Dr. W. A. Cleland examine a healthy charmer!

This senior course is a favorite here at Duke because the girls have the satisfaction of knowing that they are performing valuable community service while they are learning. In addition to their work at Lincoln and with their families they observe and work at the Cerebral Palsy Hospital and various Durham nursery schools.

The natural appeal of children also makes work on the pediatric ward at Duke a favorite for the junior and senior students. Since today's nursing student faces the same tuition and other university fees as any other Duke student, the opportunity to earn money is often a necessity. Evening duty and weekend duty of the 3rd and 4th year students makes outside job commitments difficult. The Hospital has an arrangement that is mutually advantageous to both hospital and student. As the students complete their training in pediatric, medical, surgical and obstetrical nursing, the girls may be called upon to work on these floors where needed.

A Hanes House bull session—a familiar part of dormitory living anywhere. Here Jane Ford seems to be telling Mary Saylor, Cynthia Kreider, Barbara Feay, Carol Todd and Louise Dize a real whopper!

A highlight for the senior nursing student is being fitted for her white uniforms—sure proof that graduation is not far off! Here Sylvia Matthews is measured while a group of classmates wait their turns.

Mr. James D. Henry conducts his East Campus music appreciation course for a group consisting of over half nursing students. In addition to their work on their nursing major, today's student at Duke must learn about the natural and social sciences, English, religion, philosophy, art and music as well. The Duke Nursing School graduate is a well-rounded person as well as an excellent nurse!
