Day Unit Facilities

Relationships between patients and staff and between staff members are as informal as possible. The staff members wear street clothes, rather than the traditional white uniforms; and this tends to make the atmosphere more like that of everyday living. Thus, experiences in interpersonal relationships occurring in the Day Unit can be more easily translated into home and community situations.

The following are some of the programmed activities of the Day Unit:

- Group discussions
- Public speaking courses and drama groups
- Guest lecturers, movies, and certain recorded programs
- Dancing classes, game learning sessions and group sings
- Courses in art and music appreciation
- Cooking classes and business luncheons

Included in the staff are: a psychiatrist, a nurse, a psychologist, an occupational therapist, a consulting social worker, a psychiatric assistant, psychiatric aides and attendants, a secretary-receptionist, and rotating personnel. Those included in the "rotating personnel" are: psychiatric residents, psychology trainees, medical students, nursing students and volunteers.

The Day Unit program will serve many individuals by helping them cope with their problems and thus preventing the need of full time hospitalization.

The Unit will also serve as a transitional facility. Patients who are sufficiently recovered from their emotional disturbance to no longer need full time inpatient care can be allowed a gradual re-entrance into the community via the Day Unit. As this adjustment is accomplished, the patient may progress to the point where he will require only outpatient therapy.

From The Auxiliary

PEGGY WARNER

April Fool's Day took a new twist at Duke Hospital this year when the Auxiliary put on its twelfth annual Pink Elephant Rummage Sale in one of the medical school classrooms which happened to be vacant during the spring holidays. This year's sale was once again under the capable direction of Mrs. James Wyngaarden who was assisted by Mrs. William Hudson.

The satisfied shoppers were mainly employees and staff of Duke Hospital.

Auxiliary members count on the sale as a needed push to clean out and sort out all the contents of their closets, attics, and basements. The sale produced a wide selection of adult's and children's clothing as well as many household articles such as: a spool bed, glassware, pots and pans, tools, books, records, draperies, and even some outdoor furniture.

An added attraction this year was the "Pig in a Poke" raffle under the direction of Mrs. Bayard Carter. For a 25¢ chance, some lucky shopper took home a brand new pressure cooker. Other valuable items won by the fortunate ticket holders proved the "Pig in a Poke" highly successful.

All proceeds from the sale were deposited in the Auxiliary's general fund and will be used to expand the Auxiliary's services in the hospital.

Other chairmen for the sale were: Telephoning: Mrs. Julian Ruffin, assisted by Mrs. Bayard Carter, Max Besser, Sue Bryant, Gaither Dunn,
