At the end of the shelter management course completed May 20, there were 35 shelter manager certificates awarded. Two were given to medical center employees and several to participants employed elsewhere in the university. Others receiving certificates were from the Durham community and included representatives from: First Baptist Church, Science and Technological Research Center, Watts Hospital, VA Hospital, Liggett and Myers, American Tobacco Co., N. C. College, IBM Corp., Chemstrand Research, Erwin Mills, Inc., and Belk Leggett.

During the shelter exercise, the course participants were asked to bring any members of their families that desired to come. Mrs. Cheek brought her thirteen-year-old son. Mrs. Bonnie Hensley, pediatric and surgical nursing supervisor and the other medical center employee taking the course, brought her husband. There were four children under ten and a baby also brought to the exercise.

Each person or family entering the shelter was given an impromptu "role" to play. Mrs. Cheek was handed a note which read: "Ask the manager to locate the remaining part of your family and be persistent." "Well, they told me to worry him, and I did," said Mrs. Cheek. "And they found them by radio in an hour's time. An acting chaplain came over finally and gave me a report of their condition and told me they were in the Sears, Roebuck fallout shelter."

Mrs. Cheek took the course voluntarily. "I felt it was something I needed to know," she explained. She found the course "quite worthwhile" and felt that "if more people would take it they wouldn't be so afraid."

The course at this time is offered every other year, however, if the world situation becomes more critical the course will be offered more frequently. The next course is planned for the spring of 1968.
