

Local alumni of the Duke University School of Nursing were recently guests of the school's alumni association at a luncheon. They sought to make suggestions about what the association could do to help ease the present shortage of R.N.'s at Duke Hospital. Suggestions included possible change in shift hours, establishment of a nursery, and increased utilization of part-time nurses. Of the almost 50 in attendance, most were not employed as nurses; however several returned to work as a result of the luncheon.
