great talent in planning and development. He had majored in mathematics in college and had received honors in this field. From figures and volumes and programs he could envisage images of useful and strong facilities. Thus the public and private out-patient clinics, the patient floors, the operating rooms—these areas that Dr. Knight will dedicate—have served thousands of people."

Others speaking on the occasion of the famed surgeon's being honored were: Dr. Clarence E. Gardner, Jr., professor emeritus of surgery; Dr. Ivan W. Brown, Jr., James Buchanan Duke Professor of Surgery and president of the Deryl Hart Society; Dr. W. C. Davison, dean emeritus of the School of Medicine; and Dr. David C. Sabiston, Jr., professor and chairman of the Department of Surgery.

The weekend program was designed to inform participants of what is going on in medicine at Duke today. The program also included the presentation of honorary membership in the Medical Alumni Association to Dr. W. C. Davison and the presentation of gifts of $12,228 by the class of '41 and $3,265 by the class of '56 to the medical center.

With obvious pride and affection, Mrs. Deryl Hart observes the plaque that bears her husband's name and tells of the tribute recently paid him by the university—the naming of the Deryl Hart Pavilion in his honor.

New Professorship Bears Alyea Name

In the spring of 1966 at the Chicago meeting of the American Urological Association, an organization was formed and given the name of DYSURIA.

The name was derived from the first letters of the words: Duke Youthful Society of Urology Residents Interested in Advancement.

The constitution of the new organization, also adopted at the Chicago meeting, states its purpose as being for the promotion of scientific advancement in the field of urologic surgery, the support of the Duke urologic training program, and the maintenance of professional and personal ties among those who have been affiliated with the Duke program.

At the Symposium on Urologic Education, held at Duke in October, the members of DY-SURIA met together for the first time since the Chicago meeting and contributed to a fund for the establishment of the first visiting professorship in the Duke Division of Urology. The man for whom the professorship was to be named, however, was kept a closely guarded secret and was not announced until the night of the symposium's special DYSURIA banquet.

The banquet got under way when the president of DYSU-RIA, Dr. Sam S. Ambrose, a former Duke resident now in private practice in Atlanta, presented certificates of honorary membership in the organization to Dr. John E. Dees, professor of urology, and Dr. Edwin P. Alyea, professor of urology and chief emeritus of the division. (Dr. Dees, who came to Duke in 1939, and Dr. Alyea, who came in 1930 to establish the Division of Urology, are the two men who have been with the division for the longest period of time.) Dr. Alyea then presented membership certificates to thirty-two of his former residents. (Thirty-two out of the forty-three residents who have trained under Dr. Alyea returned for the occasion.)

Following the presentation of the certificates, Dr. Ambrose announced the new visiting professorship, prefacing the announcement with: "Every organization needs to have a purpose, and one of the prime purposes of this organization is to honor Dr. Edwin P. Alyea by establishing in his honor the Edwin P. Alyea Visiting Professorship of Urology."

The new visiting professorship will enable the division to bring each year an outstanding urologist to Duke for several days to make rounds with the staff and residents and to deliver talks. The first will be invited during 1967.

he joined the Duke staff in 1930 as chairman of the newly created Department of Radiology.)

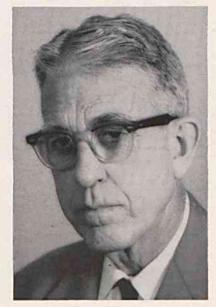

The society was founded in 1955 by former residents and staff of the Department of Radiology. At present there are 92 members; and, when the residents who began their training under Dr. Reeves complete their program, membership will total 100. Of these, ten are now in academic departments, and two are departmental chairmen.

Highlighting the meeting was a banquet honoring Dr. Reeves. A scroll was presented to the radiologist, bearing the signatures of his former residents and staff with resolutions of appreciation for his years of dedicated teaching at Duke. Also presented were two sets of radiology text books for the R. J. Reeves Library, to be located in the department's new quarters scheduled for completion in March. A personal gift was given by Dr. and Mrs. James Semans. It was announced that members of the society have commissioned an oil portrait of Dr. Reeves, also for the new library.

Society Lauds Dr. R. J. Reeves

The sixth meeting of the R. J. Reeves Radiological Society, held at Duke in November, was in honor of Dr. Reeves, professor of radiology and chairman emeritus of the department.

Invited speaker was Dr. Ross Golden, professor of radiology at U.C.L.A. who was chairman of the Radiology Department at Columbia-Presbyterian when Dr. Reeves joined the staff there after finishing his residency at Harvard. (It was from Columbia that Dr. Reeves came when
