

Med Alumni

(continued from page one)

TO BE DEDICATED—The new surgical outpatient clinic on the ground floor of Baker House will be dedicated to Dr. Clarence E. Gardner during ceremonies at Alumni Weekend.

Center opened its doors in 1930 and later became professor of surgery. He succeeded Dr. Deryl Hart as chairman of the department.

Friday evening's dinner and dance for alumni, staff and guests will conclude the day's events.

On Saturday morning alumni may choose to take part in teaching rounds with any of the departments. Following a continental breakfast, the graduates will hear a talk on "So Your Son or Daughter Wants to Be a Doctor" by Dr. Suydam Osterhout, assistant dean for admissions.

Special guided tours of the medical center's new facilities will be conducted by the hospital's administrative residents. The alumni will meet in the main lobby of the hospital for an ivy planting ceremony before lunch.

The ivy, from the garden of the noted British medical educator Sir William Osler, will commemorate the link between Osler's view on medical education and the programs of former Duke medical dean W. C. Davison. Dr. Davison met Dr. Osler while the former dean was a Rhodes scholar at Oxford College. Dr. Davison carried many of Osler's new concepts of bringing medical education into the hospital wards to Duke and the United States.

Alumni will enjoy a barbecue lunch and attend the Duke-North Carolina State football game. Classes planning special reunions will have dinner parties that evening.

For the alumni wives who prefer not to attend the scientific sessions, a variety of special activities will be available. Guided tours of the campus, a reception given by Mrs. Douglas Knight, wife of the University president, a concert by the Ciampi String Quartet and a luncheon on the West Campus are planned to entertain the ladies. A tea at the School of Nursing in Hanes House Friday afternoon also will be open to alumni wives along with faculty wives, students and nursing alumnae.

Since its first graduating class in 1932, Duke medical school has granted M. D. degrees to approximately 2,450 students.

Minimum Wage Raised to $1.60

The minimum wage rate at the medical center jumped to $1.60 per hour on October 7.

Employees previously making the $1.45 per hour rate set in May received the raise in their first October paycheck.

The Executive Committee of the University Board of Trustees made the decision in keeping with its program to maintain a competitive position on nonacademic salaries.

The present federal minimum wage standard for colleges and universities is $1.15 per hour. Federal guidelines call for gradual steps to $1.60 per hour by February, 1971. Duke's increase to $1.60 per hour now puts the University nearly 2½ years ahead of federal minimums.

G.L. ACKERMAN	J.L. CALLAWAY	M.E. CONTI	W.H. DARDEN

G.L. DONNELLY	R.J. DUFFY	J. GASKEL	C.H. GAY

W.T. HASLER, Jr.	C.M. KENDRICK	O.F. KLECKNER	G.C. LEWIS
	DUKE UNIVERSITY SCHOOL OF MEDICINE GRADUATES 1933
C.F. MONTGOMERY			W.J. WEATHERFORD

THE LINE-UP—Duke's fourteen medical school graduates in 1933 have been invited back to the campus for a special reunion during the fourth annual Fall Medical Alumni Weekend. Dr. J. Lamar Calloway, a member of the class and professor and chief of dermatology at Duke, will host the class' 35th reunion.