Duke Trustees Establish Dr. Bayard Carter Chair

The founder and first chairman of the Department of Obstetrics and Gynecology has been honored with the endowment of a chair in his honor.

The University's Board of Trustees recently gave its authorization for the F. Bayard Carter Chair of Obstetrics and Gynecology.

Dr. Carter has been engaged in private practice in Durham since retiring from Duke on his seventieth birthday last year. He was chairman of the department here until 1964.

The Bayard Carter Society of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, formerly called the Nick Carter Travel Club, made the first gifts toward the establishment of such a chair several years ago. The society is made up of nearly 70 former house staffers who have worked and studied under Dr. Carter.

When the idea was first proposed, retiring Duke President Douglas M. Knight said, "I can think of no one who more clearly deserves to have a professorship established in his honor."

A native of Wilmington, Del., Dr. Carter earned his A. B. degree at the University of Delaware and was granted two additional degrees at Oxford University as a Rhodes Scholar. He received his M. D. degree from Johns Hopkins University in 1925.

A member and officer in many state, national and international professional organizations, Dr. Carter received the Algonon Sidney Sullivan Award for distinguished service to the South in 1955. The Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists in England last year elected him to a life-time membership, an honor extended to only seven other Americans in the history of the society.
