

Dr. Hobbs Announces Faculty Changes

Seven new faculty promotions and status changes were announced recently by Dr. Marcus E. Hobbs, University provost.

Four of the seven changes were promotions to associate professorships.

Dr. William Longley, who came to Duke as an assistant professor of anatomy in 1968, was named associate professor in January.

Born in Cornwall, England, Dr. Longley earned his bachelor's degree in physics and a master's and Ph. D. in crystallography from the University of London in 1957, 1958, and 1963, respectively.

He was a research associate with the Department of Pathology at the Children's Cancer Research Foundation in Boston before taking his appointment at Duke.

Miss Janet E. Campbell, a native of Boston, was named associate professor in the Duke School of Nursing.

She is a graduate of Simmons College and earned her master's degree from the University of Chicago in 1951. At Duke since 1962, Miss Campbell has been teaching in the field of public health nursing.

Promoted to associate professor of pathology was Dr. William W. Johnston. He retains his title as director of the School of Cytotechnology at the Medical Center.

Dr. Johnston, a native of Statesville, earned his B. S. degree from Davidson College and his M. D. from Duke in 1954 and 1959, respectively. He served as an intern, resident, and assistant in pathology at Duke before being named assistant professor in 1965.

Dr. Wendell F. Rosse, associate professor of medicine, was given the additional title of associate professor of immunology.

A native of Sidney, Nebraska, Dr. Rosse attended the University of Chicago and earned his A. B. degree from the University of Omaha in 1953. He completed a master's in physiology at the University of Nebraska in 1956 and earned his M. D. from the University of Chicago School of Medicine in 1958. Dr. Rosse came to Duke in 1966.

Two men were promoted to assistant professorships in medicine and a third was named assistant professor of pharmacology.

Dr. Victor S. Behar, a native of Brooklyn, N. Y., moved from an associate in medicine to assistant professor in the department. Dr. Behar earned a B. A. degree from Washington and Jefferson College in 1957 and received his M. D.

from Duke in 1961. He remained at Duke as an intern and resident and was named an associate in medicine in 1968.

Dr. Behar is presently serving as a teaching and research scholar of the American College of Physicians.

Also named assistant professor of medicine was Dr. Lawrence Stephen Lessin. Dr. Lessin attended the University of Michigan before earning his M. D. degree at the University of Chicago School of Medicine in 1962.

He was an intern, resident, and fellow in hematology at the University of Pennsylvania Hospital before spending a year as a special fellow at the Institute of Cellular Pathology in Paris.

Dr. Lessin came to Duke in 1968 as an associate in medicine and has also served as attending hematologist at the Durham Veterans Administration Hospital.

Dr. Howard L. Elford, an assistant professor of experimental medicine since November, has been given the additional position as assistant professor of pharmacology.

Dr. Elford, a native of Chicago, came to Duke from a post as assistant professor of biological chemistry at the University of Michigan. He holds a B. S. degree in chemistry from the University of Illinois and earned his Ph. D. in biochemistry from Cornell University in 1962.

John B. Hickam Dies in Chicago

A memorial fund has been established for Dr. John B. Hickam, 54, a former faculty member here, who died of a cerebral hemorrhage while attending a medical education meeting in Chicago Feb. 9.

Contributions to the John B. Hickam Memorial Fund should be sent to Dr. Glenn Irwin, dean of the School of Medicine, Indiana University, Indianapolis, Ind., 46202.

Dr. Hickam came to Duke from Emory in 1947 with Dr. Eugene Stead when Dr. Stead became chairman of medicine here. Dr. Hickam remained at Duke until 1958, when he was named chairman of medicine at Indiana, the post he held at the time of his death.

He had been a member of the Medical Center Board of Visitors.
