

BIDDING BELL FAREWELL—Jim Mills, a senior medical technician who works in the Surgical Virology Laboratory, helped move the lab from Bell Building to the second floor of the Edwin L. Jones Building over the past two weeks. According to one of Mills' co-workers, just watching him work can make one tired because he never seems to slow down. (Photo by David Williamson)

I.V. Team

Marian Riley, ALPN, married James Stephenson, May 29, and moved to Hampton, Va.

Nancy Starkey, RN, had a baby girl, Joanna, April 27. She is on maternity leave.

Recently the I.V. Team participated in the training of Emergency Medical Technicians from the Durham County Hospital Association Rescue Unit II and from the Parkwood volunteer firemen's unit.

The training included the art of venipuncture, sterile technique, proper use of I.V. equipment, and the calculation of I.V. fluids.

The men were divided into two groups for the training, scheduled between February 24 and May 28. Members of the first group have been accredited by the state of North Carolina and are now successfully starting I.V.'s when needed.

Early Photos Sought

As the new chief executive officer of Duke Hospital, Dr. Roscoe R. Robinson would like to recognize the men who have directed the hospital over the past 46 years.

The photographs of each of the men will be framed and mounted on the wall in the Administrative Conference Room.

The problem is the lack of photographs of the earliest administrators.

Elon Clark, professor emeritus of medical art who has been around here since 1934, has assumed responsibility for the project and would like to hear from anyone who has photographs of the former directors/superintendents/administrators, as they were variously called.

Photographs will be given the safest care and will be returned as soon as copy shots are made of them, Clark said. He can be reached by mail at Box 3701 or by calling 684-3438 (vice president's office) or 684-3325 (history of medicine room in library).

Clark said these are the men who have headed the hospital:

* Marcella Eaton Winston, 1929-32. (Duke Hospital didn't open until July 21, 1930, but Winston's appointment dated from a year earlier.)

* F. Vernon Altvater, 1932-46.

* Harold C. Mickey, 1946-49.

* F. Ross Porter, 1949-58.

* Charles H. Frenzel, 1959-67.

* Dr. Robert Whalen, 1967-68.

* Dr. Stuart Sessoms, 1968-75.

Clark said that photographs are needed of Winston and Mickey.

"Health in Our Later Years," an article based on an interview with Dr. Ewald W. Busse, director of medical and allied health education, appears in the May-June issue of NRTA Journal, published by the National Retired Teachers Association.

Busse, a psychiatrist, former department chairman and the founder and long-time director of the Center for the Study of Aging and Human Development, is questioned at length on a wide range of subjects from sex among the elderly to hypochondria to hints on leading a better lifestyle.

A question-and-answer interview with Dr. M. Carlyle Crenshaw, who is E.C. Hamblen professor of reproductive medicine and family planning, makes up a page 1 article in the June issue of Diabetes Outlook.

The article is "Pregnancy and Diabetes: Strict Monitoring Is Urged." Crenshaw is chief of the Division of Clinical Obstetrics and co-director of the Division of Perinatal Medicine.

Cars More Dangerous Than British Guns In 1775

Two hundred years after the beginning of the American Revolution, traffic accidents have become a greater threat to American lives than were British guns in 1775.

According to the National Safety Council, more Americans may die in traffic accidents during the upcoming Independence Day holiday than were killed in the battles of Lexington, Concord, and Bunker Hill in the first three months of the Revolutionary War.

Please drive carefully. Be around to celebrate next July 4 too.

HONORING A FRIEND—Rachel Mann, an Operating Room medical supply assembler since January of 1965, was guest of honor at a retirement party given in the OR's fifth floor lounge area last Tuesday. Among the gifts administrator George Brandon presented to her on behalf of her fellow employees and friends was an engraved silver bowl bearing her name, the date of her retirement and a "Thank You" for loyal service. Admission is free to the 7 p.m. performance. A fireworks display at Wallace Wade Stadium will follow the musical.

CORRECTION

In early issues of last week's Intercom, a photograph of Drs. Edward Pritchett and John Gallagher with members of Lions International belonging on page one and a photograph of the medical team staffing the new Trauma Unit belonging on page two were inadvertently switched by the printers. Intercom regrets the error.

Giving blood is a nice way to say "I love you" to someone you'll never see.
