The Lounge As A Social Disease

SEX: Male or Female
AGE: 21 years (average)
HEIGHT: From 4' 10" to 7' 2"
WEIGHT: Average: Male 155 lbs. — Female 120 lbs.

TEMPERATURE: 98.6 and rising
BLOOD TYPES: O, A, B, AB
BLOOD PRESSURE: Variable according to number of homework assignments missed.

URINE ANALYSIS: Highly acidic due to consumption of Cokes, Mountain Dews, and Pepsi in astronomical amounts.

GENERAL SYMPTOMS: Glass Stare? Bloodshot eyes?? Coughing (due to inhalation of smoke???) Cramps in hands and shoulders, steaming from over indulgence in Foos Ball and Pinball. Allergenic Itching - card-io-illogicitis. General loss of hearing. Apathetic and Depressed - lack of interest in school functions.

DIAGNOSIS: If one or more of the above symptoms are present in your mind or body, you may be suffering from a possible college oriented social disease, Loungaholicism. Not all cases observed are fatal but contraction of disease can have long lasting effects, ie; NC's and I's on transcript, low G.P.A., life long sense of missing involvement during early college years.

PROPOSED CURE: Immediate relief can be obtained by Absentia Lounga. Long range cure will require willpower and involvement in one or more activities on campus, ie; SGA committees and Fine Arts concerts. A miniscule amount of library time would not be detrimental towards overall cure. Now that you are aware of the problem, take immediate action and begin curing yourself.

Emme Kemp Concert

BOX SCORE: Kemp 10 Audience 0

The excellent performance given by the Emme Kemp Trio the night of Tuesday, September 24th, was marred by the poor and discourteous conduct of the audience. Miss Kemp's group provided superior renditions of such popular favorites as: "On a Clear Day", "Summertime", and "Help Me Make it Through the Night". The repeated comings and goings of the audience and constant chatter provided the artist with an atmosphere definitely not conducive to a good performance. However, Miss Kemp's group showed the essence of true professionalism by an unwavering effort to provide only the best performance in the face of adversity.
