PEDRO IS SUBJECT OF AN INTERESTING INTERVIEW

college education, as he finds a college environment much more to his taste than the sordid life of the circus. This is doubtless unquestionable, since he is inherently a lizard of refinement. He also takes a great interest in the gymnastic program of the college, being somewhat of an acrobat himself. He is, I am told, frequently to be found in his private gymnasium practicing numerous acrobatic stunts which border on the marvelous.

It is certain that he has a very optimistic view of life and means to get as much out of life as possible. Just what he intends to do with his future life is, as yet, a bit uncertain; very likely after the completion of his education he will go among the members of his own kind and further the training and refinement of those in which he is naturally most interested. He is a true democrat and would doubtless be able to gain the confidence of the members of both the higher and lower orders of his kind.

N. C. COLLEGIATE PRESS ASSOCIATION IN MEETING

work as a game, and urged the seriousness of the task of editing a paper upon the young journalists. His address covered a large field, but he filled it with humorous anecdotes of his own newspaper career and made it interesting throughout.

Following Mr. Beasley's address the Student Council of Meredith gave an informal reception to the association. Throughout the entire stay of the press association the lavish hospitality of Meredith was in evidence. It seemed that the whole of the student body had united to make the stay of the delegates the most pleasant possible.

At the Friday morning session the members of the association heard Dr. Julia Harris, of the Meredith faculty, on "Good Form in College Journalism." Dr. Harris was delightfully entertaining in her address, and she succeeded in being practical. She stressed that fact that no person could be original, and urged that all college writers should read the best literature for form and influence of thought. Then, characteristically of her sex, Dr. Harris said that every writer must be original. Explaining this, she said that the reader who would write must make the reading his own, and create his individual style.

Mr. Piekens, of the University of North Carolina, spoke at some length of headline writing. He discussed types and spaces, and gave many valuable hints in the writing of headlines for papers. He also mentioned the matters of composition and style in news writing.

Dr. Weaver, of Wake Forest, spoke at the afternoon session on the short-story. He cited examples and plead for better short-stories in the college magazines. The matters of North Carolina reading and writing recently discussed in the state press were freely brought out by a number of the speakers, and they urged upon those present the fact that the future of the state's reading and writing would depend very largely upon the college students of today. Dr. Weaver stressed this point strongly.

ens, and various other things, and were very attractive. Nearly everyone present wore a mask, the mystery of which made the occasion much the merrier.

About 9:30 the guests formed a long line and marched to one corner of the room, where apples and peanuts were served by several ghosts.

The informality of the whole evening added to the enjoyment and merriment of all present. This was the first of a series of parties which the Religious Activities Organization will give during the year.

FRESHMAN CLASS MEETS TO PERFECT ORGANIZATION

cuss further some of the persons to fill the other places.

The class is trying to establish a new custom this year. They decided to plant a tree on the campus during their freshman year rather than waiting until their senior year to do so. They intend to plant a pecan tree so that in the years to come it will be useful as well as ornamental.

The class seems to feel that it has made a good beginning and with its newly elected officers to lead they are expecting to do great work.
