MONEY AND LIFE

To build a life is more important than to make a living. Any average man with energy can make money, but a life that can be measured in dollars and cents falls far short of genuine achievement.

A college education ought to and does increase a man's earning capacity, but it is infinitely more important that it should increase his living capacity. A college education which fails to enlarge a man's heart as well as his mind has hopelessly failed. The college which does not educate the heart of a student is not a safe college to attend.

A nation's wealth is not the gold in the vaults of its treasury, not the stocks and bonds held by its people, and not its natural resources, but its people. The men and women who live within its borders are the real assets or liabilities.

Brain power and heart power are assets which never drop below par. They have always gone and will always go at a premium.

These are facts which every high school graduate should carefully consider, and strive to equip himself with these stable quantities. From the colleges come our leaders, and a college education multiplies a man's chance to become a leader by fifty-nine.

The bottom of the ladder is always crowded, but there is always room at the top. Every high school graduate has the opportunity of rising to the top of the ladder. Whether or not a high school graduate attends college this fall will in a large measure determine what rung of the ladder he will occupy in the years to come.
