CLIO ANNUAL ENTERTAINMENT IS PRESENTATION OF TWO ACT COMEDY "A REGULAR SCREAM"

sity-Alumni basketball game was played, in which great thrills were produced, both for the students and "old timers" that were back on the hill visiting.

At 8:00 P. M. the welcome address was delivered by W. C. Elder, who in his oratorical way welcomed the visitors most cordially to their play entitled "A Regular Scream."

Again the good old Clios, not so many in numbers, but outstanding in their quality as to their ability in putting across one of the best programs of the College year stands out pre-eminently as the society that never fails when trying to amuse its friends in giving them a joyful evening's amusement.

The play consisted of eleven characters well suited to the part each played. To some it was a new experience to come before so large an audience on a stage. For others it was not nearly so embarrassing. They could step out before their audience unmoved by fright and face it as a sunflower faces the noon day sun. All the actors showed the good effects of the good training which they have received through practice in speaking in the society hall. The society also is heavily indebted to Mrs. L. M. Cannon who acted as dramatic coach and F. D. Ballard, who was the stage director. Both rendered a valuable service and by the hearty cooperation of all the players in complying with their every request, matters were facilitated considerably in the preliminary training.

G. C. White, a member of the Junior class, played the part of Prince Cyril, who was the prince of Verenetz, a Harvard freshman being initiated into a fraternity. He took the stage with ease and played his part as the name would imply, "princely." Mr. White is a very popular fellow among the student body and, indeed, did work that is a credit to the society.

A. N. Green, a Freshman, played the part of Carlos Romaine. This is perhaps his first experience on the stage as a player, but he showed he had the qualities of a good actor. He spoke very distinctly and with much enthusiasm.

H. A. Clark, another member of the Freshman class, a strong, stalwart, robust looking young man, played the part of Lieutenant Boronge from the royal army of Verengenty. He proved to be a very proficient player and should be congratulated.

The part of Hon. John Winslow was played by C. W. Dunn, who was Myles father. He was bitterly opposed to college fraternities, but was finally persuaded to let Myles join one, seeing the good it had done other fellows. Mr. Dunn is a member of the Senior class and had a very heavy part, but he did not hesitate in doing his part, when the Clio's needed him.

II. Richardson, another loyal member played the part of Myles Stanish Winslow. He is a bright and cheerful young man, and played one of the most outstanding parts in the play. He was on the job when it came time to play. He is small but so full of go and pep, that he offered to get in a chair to fight a large man. Oftimes the best goods come in small packages.

D. L. Harrell played the part of Benjamin Franklin Winslow, who was never able to invent anything but mischief and he was good at that. His grandmother thought he would end his days in a house of correction. Mr. Harrell played his part well. He is an able actor, and showed he was experienced in that work.

The part of Horace Weber was played by D. W. Jones. He played the part of the Sophomore who always got by with a thoughtful air and intelligent face. His part was suitably adapted to the man who was playing. He is the life of a crowd, when you want to have a good time. He is always full of fun and laughter.

Arthur Loveland was played by C. M. Hawn, better known as "Shiek".

He was always thinking of something original, he was a good sample of originality. He doesn't have to think. He is full of wit and humor, and got off his part with much comedy.

T. R. Ruston, who hails from Delaware, played the part of Richard Manson. Mr. Ruston is another new man, coming to Elon this year. He is a regular fellow and is a very popular young man in the various college activities.

The part of Austin Beaufort was played by E. L. Parkerson. Beaufort is the young man who was saved by joining a college fraternity. Mr. Parkerson was away much of the time while practicing, he being on the basketball team, consequently missing quite a bit of practice. However, he played his part with ease and assumed a natural position on the stage.

Last, but not least, was good Old Midnight Black, Silas Brown, played by Atkins Clarke. Mr. Clarke is quite an amateur in plays, having had a wide experience in stage performance. The audience was kept in a continual uproar all the time Silas was on the scene. His was not the climax of the play, but a prominent one and one of the outstanding characters. To the audience Silas' acting was comical but to Silas it was a fine unadulterated tragedy when he ran into Mr. Winslow and couldn't find a place to fly through the roof. He didn't intend to be scandalized by any one. He is the life of a crowd. When you want to have a good time, he is always full of fun and laughter.

Between acts the Clio orchestra, directed by an old alumnus of the society, Mr. M. Z. Rhodes, furnished music. The play was witnessed by a large crowd, and everyone enjoyed it.

Amidst all the happenings of the day, much excitement, merriment and enjoyment was brought to us by the sky opening up and giving to us an old alumnus, R. S. Rainey and with him Captain Phillips. They descended as a peaceful dove approaching her nest and stayed with us from Friday evening until late Sunday evening. While they were here, many passengers were carried up. Not only is the Clio Literary Society the first to bring a plane to Elon for holiday amusement, but it was used to carry a cameraman up to take pictures from the air, of the campus and college, which will be used in the 1925 Phippsich.

In order to prove that the air was as safe as the land, Captain Phillips performed many stunts over the campus, everything from the loop the loop to the tail spin. A large crowd gathered about the flying field, which was located north of the campus, in order to see the plane fly and to take a trip up among the clouds. This continued until late Sunday evening, when the sun was seen dipping in a westwardly direction, and the day about to give up its beauty, then Captain Phillips, like a lark homeward bound, was seen ascending the heavens and setting his plane in a southwardly direction, where he will rest the air monster at his home in Biscoe.

Holland was sporting proudly a new shirt when a friend asked: "How many yards does it take for a shirt like that?"

Holland replied: "I got three like this out of one yard last night."
