hostess. The house was beautifully decorated with flowers.

A short business meeting followed, when the coming year's work was discussed. Miss Savage very kindly offered to order the books the club wished to read. A committee consisting of Mrs. W. A. Harper, Mrs. J. W. Barney, Miss Lila Newman and Miss Helen R. Stearns, was appointed to get out a booklet containing an outline of the year's study to be pursued. The election of new officers may come up in the future.

Before going home the guests were served a dainty lunch. Some of the Neveles knew they had had a good time, others were not so sure about it. But all were glad they were Neveles.

and escorted them back to their dormitories. This party was attended by all the young ladies of the college and most of the lady faculty members.

I am sure that everybody had a wonderful time because they were all children once again.

TO PAULINE SHOOP

Elon College is more than fortunate in many ways. She has buildings, spirit, history, traditions, and all of the things that would naturally go into making the best small college in the country. Now there has been added something of the unusual to her equipment. This unusual item comes in the form of a diminutive young lady, small in stature but large in natural gifts. She is a very recent addition to the college, but her fame precedes her. The following little poem is from the hand of a poet who had the rare opportunity to have himself lifted out of the ordinary hum of life and into the ethereal atmosphere by the bow and string of this talented musician:

As I started for Kiwanis

On a sultry August day,
I was feelin' kinda' grouchy
And I almost stayed away.

But, Gee! I'm glad I didn't,
For them I should of missed
A very sweet experience
That wasn't on the list.

We were sittin' aroun' as usual,
An' things were rather slo',
Tho' several of our would-be wits
Were tryin' to make it go.

When a pause in the proceedings came
And Marion rose to say
That a pair of pretty ladies
Had consented for to play.

And a dainty little damsel,
With a bright and lovely face,
Steps up to the piano,
Tucks her fiddle in its place.

And, Lord! you should have heard it,
Soon I didn't have a care,
For the magic of her music
Took me clean away from there.

To a purer, sweeter planet
Where there never was a sin
I was waffed by this lassie
And her little violin.

And, honest, little lady,
I am feelin' better still,
For this all too short vacation
You have given thru your skill.

And I think you should be thankful
That the magic of your art
Could bring so much of solace
To my old tired heart.

—Dr. Cox.
