A WARNING

In Ecclesiastes there is a verse which says "much study is a weariness of the flesh." Now we have seen many weary people at Elon lying out on the campus in the hot afternoon, or dozing peacefully in their rooms in more inclement weather, but we are of the opinion that this great weariness is not caused by excessive study, though perhaps the profs might wish it were.

The point we want to make is that this semester is drawing swiftly to a close—with only three more weeks of class periods to demonstrate to our professors that we have been getting something out of our courses and we are worth a few quality points.

It's pretty hard to study when the sunshine draws us outside for a sunbath, or there is a tennis match or baseball game going on, but there is a time coming very soon when it will be harder still to explain to our dotting mothers and fathers just why we received a 75 when they knew we had enough natural intelligence when mixed with a little work to get an 85 or above.

BEST WISHES

The staff of the Maroon and Gold wishes to express its congratulations to the newly elected editor-in-chief of the Maroon and Gold, Ben Lillen. As the mantle of responsibility and honor falls from our shoulders, we feel that in Mr. Lillen we have a capable and efficient successor. With the proper cooperation which is due him from the student body there is no reason why the Maroon and Gold should not attain an undisputed position among the ranks of college papers.

This year the Maroon and Gold has been handicapped to some degree. It made its reappearance as a weekly paper during this school year, and consequently, there have been some things which were not as they should have been. Having now become established as a weekly edition, it will go forward in a bigger and better way under Mr. Lillen and his co-workers. We have laid the foundation, and we are looking to the new editor to continue building and strengthening the paper of the students. It can be done and it will be done if everyone will support the staff in its work.

And so, while wishing Mr. Lillen the best of success in his office, we are also very glad to say that the next two issues following this one will under the direction of your new editor-in-chief and his staff.
