

Ground Is Broken For New Elon Library

PARTICIPANTS IN CEREMONIES FOR NEW COLLEGE LIBRARY

Construction Planned For Near Future

Coming as the high spot in the highly successful Parents' Day event on the Elon campus on Saturday, November 5th, was the ground-breaking ceremonies for the new Elon College library, which is to be erected in the near future at a cost estimated at $840,000 or more.

The ground-breaking for the new library came after dedication ceremonies for four buildings that have already been built, the three new men's dormitories and the new student center, and it assumed special importance in the fact that the construction of the library is still in the future and represents further growth for Elon and the Elon educational facilities.

The new library, to be constructed at the southwest corner of Elon's walled campus, will replace the historic Carlton Library, which at present houses a library of 59,000 volumes. The Carlton Library was built in 1923-24 with funds from the Carlton family at a total cost of less than $100,000 for the building and furnishings.

The present library was dedicated on September 24, 1924, when the late Dr. J. O. Atkinson presented the building to the college on behalf of the Carlton family, with the late D. R. Fonville accepting on behalf of the trustees and the church. William B. Terrell, member of the senior class that year, who is now Elon's alumni secretary, accepted the Carlton Library on behalf of the students of that day.

The proposed new library building, for which the ground was broken on the first Saturday in November, calls for a structure of traditional design to merge with other structures on the campus. It is to be three stories in height and will provide all the facilities which a modern college library should have.

The main floor will provide office and work space for the library staff, a circulation desk, a card catalogue, reference materials, space for current periodicals, catalogued phone discs and listening tables and study tables and chairs.

The basement floor will provide stack space, individual study carrels, study tables and chairs and storage
