

Fighting Christian Five Gets Win Over Falcons

The Elon Christians broke away to a quick lead in the early moments and went on to defeat the Pfeiffer Falcons 77 to 59 in the first home game in Elon's Alumni Memorial Gymnasium last Saturday night. The victory evened the Elon cagers for the season with two wins and two losses.

Off to a fast and sharpshooting start against the Pfeiffer cagers, the Christians were out front by 16-4 margin after barely seven minutes of action, and they were ahead by 22-7 just two minutes later, but Pfeiffer rallied at that point and began whittling at the Elon lead.

The Christians, seemingly tired on their third consecutive night of play, bogged down in their attack in the final portion of the first half, and they led by only eight points at 37-29 at the half-time break.

Henry Goedeck paced the Christian attack with 21 points, while Tommy Davis racked 15, Tom McGee 13 and Rick Hare 11 counters. Jim Burkhart topped the Falcons with 15 and Rick Knapp had 12 points for the night.

Henry Goedeck, Elon's big sophomore center, and Tom McGee, an eagle-eyed freshman guard, led this first half drive by the Christians, but Tommy Davis and Rick Hare joined in the shooting game in the closing half during which Coach Bill Miller's boys never allowed Pfeiffer to come closer than seven points.

REID THIS!

Were I the worrying sort, I'd shed a tear for Elon's current English majors.

I am wondering what the devil they're reading other than Playboy.

For the nonsense of it, I sent down to Elon names of six literary characters. Four undergraduates volunteered to identify them. Actually, the students got themselves obligated due to pressure applied by a certain Elon president and professor who found himself in the same fix.

So, if you wish to play fun and games, see if you can beat the quartet's showing with these:

- 1) John F. X. Markham
- 2) Brom Bones
- 3) Amos Forsythe
- 4) Kendall Nesbitt
- 5) Mr. Damon
- 6) James Olsen

Now, for our fearless foursome's answers.

Markham: Nobody knew this one, although one took a shot at his being in Robert L. Stevenson's "Markham." Man, that's one up on me. The character I had in mind was the d.a. in the Philo Vance detective stories. Maybe old Philo is so square, nobody's reading him these days.

Bones: Two out of four came through on this one—the blustering bully and local swain in Washington Irving's "Legend of Sleepy Hollow."

Forsythe: Zero here. Isn't "The Last Hurrah" in our library?

Nesbitt: I thought if I threw a little sex into the quiz, I'd do all right, but, no. This vexes me. Nesbitt was the lover in "Lady In The Dark."

Mr. Damon: Another blank. Mr. Damon was real swift. Matter of fact, he was in the Tom Swift books. Mr. Damon was the man who went around saying "Bless My Soul!" about Tom Swift's Electric Grandmother and other live-wire inventions.

Olsen: Ah! You younger generation—you're not all bad. Mark down 100 per cent correct replies for this one. Jimmy Olsen is noe of America's more fascinating literary characters. He is Clark Kent's cub reporter associate on that great metropolitan newspaper, The Daily Planet. One of the four answer sheets included source material: Action Comics.

Now, look.

If you don't know who Clark Kent is, make a superhuman guess, will you?

Terriers Top Elon Cagers

The Wofford Terriers put five men in double figures as they turned back the Elon Christians 77 to 63 at Wofford on Tuesday night, November 29th, with the Terriers chalking their third straight win of the new season while the Elon cagers were playing their first game.

The Christians kept the battle close throughout the first half, which ended with the homestanding Wofford cagers on top by a 42 to 38 count, but the Terriers moved to the front early in the second half as Bob Kendall paced a Wofford scoring drive.

The Elon cagers, who opened their initial contest of the year with two freshmen, two sophomores and one junior in the starting line-up had trouble hitting the basket from short range as the three Christian tall boys on the inside netted only 28 points for a combined total. By comparison the Wofford inside men counted 4 points.

Tom McGee, a freshman guard from Deer Park, N. Y., led the Elon scoring with 20 points; and Noble Marshall, another first-year guard, chipped in 13 counters. Henry Goedeck, big Christian center, had 11 points for the night.

Jim Littlefield and Bob Kendall each racked 17 points for the Terriers while John Hendrix and Willie Pegram each had 14 and Barry Lentz 11.

The line-ups:

Pos.	Elon (63)	Wofford (77)
F.	Bowes (8)	Kendall (17)
F.	Hare (9)	Hendrix (14)
C.	Goedeck (11)	Pegram (14)
G.	Davis (2)	Littlefield (17)
G.	McGee (20)	Lentz (11)
