Frampton to play concert Sept. 30

The first Lyceum program this fall semester will feature a combination of jazz, rock, and classical music performed by Mac Frampton.

Not only is he an immensely talented pianist but people who have seen him perform before know that he is also a first class showman. No one ever leaves a Mac Frampton concert without having heard something stylistically to his liking.

At the age of three, Mac began playing the piano. Today he is currently one of the hottest young performers on the international concert circuit. His show features his dazzling keyboard acrobatics, fine intricate drum work, and a driving percussive bass.

Over the past six years, Mac and his group have played nearly 600 concerts in the United States, Canada, Europe and the Near East.

With six successful record albums to his credit, Mac Frampton is rapidly rising to even higher national stardom.

His concert will be held Thursday, Sept. 30, at 8 p.m. in Whitley Auditorium. The general public is invited and college program credit will be given to Elon students.

Mac Frampton will be the lyceum program performer on Thursday, Sept. 30. He's been playing the piano since the age of 3.

SGA team pulls together

By Joy Hamilton

"We are closely knit and work well together—we're looking forward to a good year," says John Sadler, current SGA president.

The three elected officers of the SGA for the 1980-81 school year are John Sadler, president, Norman Whittington, vice-president, and Dan Daly, treasurer.

John Sadler is a senior from Baltimore, Md. He is a resident counselor at Smith dorm. John's major is biology with minors in history and chemistry. He is also on the reaccreditation committee, the inter-fraternity council, and an active member of Sig Ep fraternity.

Norman Whittington, SGA vice-president, has been at Elon for three years. He is a business administration major from Crisfield, Md. He also is a Sig Ep member, but says, "We're here to represent everybody, not just frats—we're trying to get everyone involved."

The SGA treasurer, Dan Daly, is an accounting and economics major from Eden, N.C. Dan is a transfer student from Duke University, and is a resident counselor at Smith. Daly says, "I adhere to basic accounting principles and an adequate auditing system. The books are prepared so that any student on campus at any time may examine them and know the current status of books—I want them to know where their money is going."

The new accounting system was set up this summer. Sadler says, "We must keep the books correctly or the SGA funds could be turned over to the supervisor of the school. An accountant from the college reviews what Dan does. He will definitely be an example that all other SGA treasurers will have to follow."

Also, during the summer, new policies and procedures for the SGA administration were revised and updated. Sadler says the SGA is looking for quality students who really care about Elon College. Applications for freshman officers are available from the SGA office.

Execs meet

Twenty college presidents from North Carolina met on the Elon College campus last Thursday. The meeting consisted of the executive and legislative committees for the North Carolina Association of Independent Colleges.

According to President Young, the meeting was "routine but important," he said. "We tried to formulate the legislative program for colleges in the upcoming general assembly." Terry Sanford of Duke University presided.

New firm in Elon

A Chicago-based manufacturing plant plans to create a $5 million plant in Elon College and to employ nearly 300 people by 1983.

RegO Company, which makes industrial gas valves and regulators, will purchase the 91,000-square-foot building off Highway 100, west of town, formerly owned by Kardon Industries, according to RegO president John R. Morrill.

Members of the Elon College Town Board have been invited to lunch today with President Morrill and three officers of RegO to hear of the company's plans.

Mr. Morrill has said that his company chose Alamance County over other sites in the South because of its stable labor climate, the availability of trainable men and women for its complicated machines, and the good schools and hospitals. In addition, the company liked the building which would allow them to start rather quickly. Actual hiring of employees will begin in January after training through the Technical College of Alamance.

Thomas J. Policastro, director of the Office of Economic Development of the county, played an important role in getting RegO to Elon College. "They are a fine industry," Policastro said. "And I think they're going to bring training to the people of Alamance County."

Offices of freshman class president, vice-president, secretary, sophomore class president, and three freshman class senator positions are open in the Student Government Association.

Applications for candidacy and instructions for filing may be obtained from the SGA bulletin board located on the second floor of Long Student Center.

All applications and petitions of support must be turned into the SGA office by Monday, Sept. 22. Elections will be held Wednesday, Sept. 24.
