Lambert named library head

Guy Lambert, associate librarian at Elon since 1963, has been named head librarian and director of the Learning Resources Center.

Lambert will direct a staff of six professional librarians and 10 clerical and para-professional workers in the 150,000 volume library.

The announcement came Monday to the library staff by Dr. James Moncure, vice president for academic affairs. Selection of Lambert was made by a special library committee made up of members of the faculty, administration, and library staff.

"As far as administration is concerned, I plan to continue the policies of the last two years," Lambert said. "I would like to involve the library more in the teaching-learning process—to have the library more connected with curriculum and the curriculum with the library."

Lambert says that quality, not quantity, should be increased. Numbers of items are not so important as what the items are, he says. "We must also be concerned about the needs of the college community."

"I would like to see more students express interest in the work of the library committee," Lambert says. "they also may recommend books for purchase."

For the Learning Resources Center, Lambert sees further development of present programs. The academic computer has been made available to students, and terminals will be provided in the library for their use.

Lambert, 44, served as associate librarian at Campbell College, Buies Creek, N.C. for two years before he came to Elon. From 1956-1961 he worked at May Memorial Library, Burlington.

Senate approves safety bill

By Vivian Miller

Expressing their concern for student safety, the Student Government Association Senate passed a bill Oct. 2, "A Resolution to Make Students Aware of Increased Criminal Activity." The bill, written by Norman Whittington, proposes to help protect students who live off campus and have become targets of criminal activity in recent weeks.

The bill states, "their protection relies upon the town of Elon College." Through campus security, it allows the college to make students aware of the situation and to instruct them in preventive measures.

It also allows Elon to join the town in security programs which include students. A new idea, included in the bill proposes that "Elon College should form an escort service for female students. Senator Janice Nelson introduced the bill and Sharon Olsen seconded it.

SGA appointments were: Communications Media Board, Anne Saleeby, Tracey Taylor and Jeff Batts; public affairs representative, Wendy Ford; deputy defense attorney, Tucker Edmonds; liberal arts forum, Kevin Clark and Nancy McLawhorn; deputy attorney general, Paul Aiello and Charlotte Collins; Student Union Board chairman, Jerry Hooker; clerk of the court, Sarah Lewallen; SUB treasurer, Mike Watson; and Honor Court composed of Layla Al-Habib, Dan Hutchinson, Teresa Farrish, Paul Hirschmann, Mike Robinson, J.B. Godley, Laurie Michaud, and Lynn Fulford.

A bill approving the purchase of an IBM correcting Selectic typewriter was also passed. SGA was able to purchase the typewriter at 75 percent of retail through Elon's Business office.
