Burch named queen; Christians win 21-14

by Shelby Bowman
Staff Writer

Homecoming Saturday started on a cold note.

Though the temperature after 2 p.m. was over 70 degrees, the Elon College Fightin' Christians felt frozen as the Carson-Newman Eagles led 14-0 in the first quarter. By the last quarter, however, Burlington Memorial Stadium sizzled as Elon students and alumni cheered football team to victory over the Eagles, 21-14.

Halftime was highlighted by the crowning of the new Homecoming Queen, Amy Burch, from Sigma Phi Epsilon. Karen Welzant of Sigma Pi was first runner-up, and Dawn Denby, representing Kappa Sigma, was second runner-up. April Buck from Alpha Sigma Alpha and Jade Nichols of the Black Culture Society tied for third runner-up.

The results of the banner contest were: first place, Zeta Tau Alpha, second place, Sigma Pi, and third place, Tri Sigma. Prizes will be awarded to these organizations by the Student Government Association at a later date.

One of the largest groups of alumni ever attended the game. King White, director of the alumni and parent office, said "Overall, the alumni with whom I spoke indicated they were very impressed with the attractiveness of the physical plant and were pleased with the steps being taken to strengthen the academic programs. Of course, homecoming is the time for former classmates to see one another again - and it was apparent that everyone had a great time being back on campus."

The alumni dance, featuring "The Tams," attracted a sellout crowd of about 400 people at the Best Western ballroom.

Crenshaw to play here Oct. 6

Marshall Crenshaw will headline the Student Union Board's semi-annual Anti-Suitcase Weekend on Oct. 6, in Whitley Auditorium at 8 p.m.

The East Cost is familiar with Crenshaw's work in New York nightclubs, covers of Crenshaw originals and an independently released single, "Something's Gonna Happen" and "She Can't Dance."

Now, with a newly released album, the nation will have a chance to sample Crenshaw's charms. Critics have compared the Warner Bros. album, entitled "Marshall Crenshaw," to Buddy Holly and The Beatles, in terms of style and clean, catchy melodies.

In Crenshaw's case, there is a three-piece band including his drumming brother, Robert, and bassist Chris Donato.

Born and raised in Detroit, 28-year-old Crenshaw credits Buddy Holly as his first full-blown influence. Within two years after high school, Crenshaw was playing five sets a night in bars and clubs around the Detroit area.

In 1976, Crenshaw left Michigan to pursue a more professional music career. After a few disappointments and false starts, Crenshaw recorded a rendition of John Lennon and Paul McCartney's "I Should Have Known Better," and submitted it with a picture of Crenshaw in wire-rimmed glasses to the producers of "Beatlemania." Subsequently, Crenshaw was hired to play John Lennon in the West Road Company.

After two years, in early 1980, Crenshaw and his brother settled in New York and began putting a band together and recording demo tapes.

MARSHALL CRENSHAW will perform in Whitley Auditorium on Wednesday, October 6. He is appearing at Elon as part of the Student Union Board's annual Anti-Suitcase Weekend.

Crenshaw, that soon afterward Crenshaw signed with Warner Bros. and together they produced "Marshall Crenshaw."

The "Rolling Stone" album chart for the week ending Oct. 14 has the album holding at number 41, after 17 weeks on the list.

Rolling Stone describes Crenshaw's chosen musical territory as dealing with "affairs of the heart. Not cars, not clothes, or cheeseburgers, not the government, not even mom and dad."

Mostly, Crenshaw's music is about the James Dean era: America's heartland and

Gov. Hunt visits, blasts Republicans

by Doug Norwood
Managing Editor

North Carolina Governor Jim Hunt visited the Elon campus Tuesday evening to show his support for Robin Britt, the Democratic challenger to Republican Sixth District Representative Eugene Johnston.

Hunt attended the eighth annual Three Governors Dinner held this year in McEwen Dining Hall.

In a news conference held on the first floor of McEwen Library, Hunt said that Britt is "a terrific candidate for Congress." He said that Republicans currently in office are to blame for the nation's economic woes exemplified by Alamance County's 11 percent unemployment rate.

Hunt said, "It took this country 200 years to get a one trillion dollar deficit; we'll add another half trillion in the four years the Republicans are in office."

He said that the two major issues in the congress-sional race are "jobs and the economy, and Social Security," and that Britt was "moderate, not liberal" in his approach to such issues.

Much of the news conference was devoted to the spilling of PCBs along 210 miles of North Carolina roadsides and the disposal of those chemicals in a Warren County landfill.

Hunt said he thought the landfill might be "the safest landfill ever built." He said the landfill was built with a layer of very thick plastic and "packed clay as thick and solid as a brick."

He emphasized the importance of chemical waste disposal in general. "People should seek the facts," he said, "but not lose their heads over everything."

Hunt said acting on the disposal of the chemicals was his job and he took the most appropriate measures in acting.

He praised Elon's campus as "one of the most beautiful
