Scottish group to perform

The Scottish band, The Tannahill Weavers, will perform traditional Celtic music to the beat of rock and roll in a concert here next Monday night.

The four-man band uses instruments ranging from bagpipes to bouzoullis to fiddles. They will appear at 8 p.m. in Whitley Auditorium in a free concert sponsored by SUB and the Lyceum Committee.

Alan MacLeoad began the band in Paisley, Scotland, with his genius at the bagpipes and was later joined by Roy Gullane, with his guitar backing and vocal skills, and Phil Smith on flute.

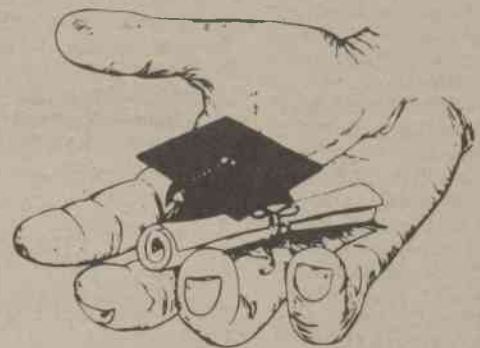

Having toured for three years, The Tannahills have performed in more than a dozen countries including Canada and Europe, and have produced five albums to date. It wasn't until their fourth album, however, that the Tannahills were introduced to American audiences in 1981. With their latest album, Passage, Doujie Madeun has been added to the group as their fiddler/guitarist.

FOUR MAN BAND - Members of the Scottish band "The Tannahill Weavers" play their traditional music which sounds a lot like bluegrass or rock and roll.
